First, Of all sorts of men, Iewes, Gentiles, Princes of the people, Priests, Souldiers, Masters, Servants, Friends, Strangers, Young, Old, Male, and Female, all cryed out, away with him; the Iewes his owne native countrey men, whom of all nations he had chosen to be his owne peculiar people, whom he came principally to save, and of whom he came according to the flesh, the Sonne of God to become a Iew for their sake, the greatest honour that ever this nation had; yet doe they primarily pleade for his death, and their vehement desire to destroy his soule, is easily descried by the redoubling of their crie, crucifie him, crucifie him; yea rather then feare of doing unjustice, thou shouldst let him escape uncrucified, we will ingage our selves to God for thee, and undertake the punishment of all thy fault, and let his bloud bee upon us and upon our children; so greedily did they thirst after the bloud of this innocent dove. And as the Iewes did crie these things, so fremuerunt gentes; the Heathen did furiously rage, The Kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers tooke counsell together, and all did shew their malice against the Lord and against his annointed.

The greatest honour of the Iewes

Psal.2.2.

2 In all things. Mar.14.50.

Secondly, In all the things, wherein it was possible for a man to suffer, As

1 In his friends.

First, In his friends, for they all forsooke him and fled, and not one of them assisted him, when he was thus persecuted by his foes.

2 In his good name.

Secondly, In his good name, for they loaded him with lies, and accused him of blasphemies.

3 In his goods.

Thirdly, In his outward goods, which we call goods of Fortune; for though he had nothing but his cloathes, yet they stripped him of his garments, and left him starke naked, but what had beene abscene for themselves to see, in the sight of all men.

4 In his senses.

Fourthly, In all his sences; for his holy eares heard nothing but shamefull revilings, his bright eyes saw nothing but cruell enemies, his feeling could perceive nothing, but sharpenesse of nayles, his smelling, but their stincking spittles, and his taste but gall and vinegar.

5 In his members. How Christ suffered in all the members of his body.

Fiftly, In all the members of his body, for his head was wounded with a crowne of thornes,; his face was defiled with their filthy spittings, and most shamefully buffeted with their sacrilegious fists; his eyes dazeled with blowes, and amazed to see their outragious cruelties; his hands and feete nayled unto the Crosse;

Crosse; his heart pierced with a speare; and in a word, his whole body was so pittifully rent and torne with whippings and scourgings, that we may truly say, Totum est pro vulnere corpus; That from the sole of his foote, unto the crowne of his head, there was nothing whole in him, but wounds, and swellings, and soares, most full of grievous paines: And in all this his great and grievous sufferings, we must know them to be the sharper, in respect of the tenderneſse of his body, and the sensibleneſse of his spirit; because (as Aristotle saith) Quo complexio nobilior, & quo mens dexterior, eo tenerior esse solet caro; The more noble our complexion, and the more quicke and nimble is our apprehension, the more sensible is our flesh of the least paine and correction; but the flesh of Christ of all other men must needs be the most tender; because (as I shewed you before) he was holy begotten of a pure Virgin, and his minde must needs bee most intellective, and most apprehensive of all paine, because he was of that age, which is most sensitive; and therefore the sufferings of Christ, in all respects must needs bee most insufferable.

Lucan Pharsal l 9.

Esay 1.6.

Aristot. l. 2. de anima c. 9.

The tenderer our flesh, and the quicker our spirit, the more sensible we are of paine.

And yet all this was but the least part of his sorrowes, not neere the halfe of his sufferings; for he was to wrastle with the wrath of God, that was due to us for our sinnes; yea, he was to tread the fiercenesse of the wrath of God: And there can be no conflict in the World so great, as to grapple with an angry God; for the Prophet David speaking hereof, saith; Thou, even thou, art to be feared, and who can stand in thy sight when thou art angry? The Earth trembled and quaked, the very foundations also of the hilles shooke, and were removed, because hee was wroth; yea, the springs of waters were seene, and the foundations of the round World were discovered, at thy chiding, O Lord, at the blasting of the breath of thy displeasure: And if his anger and displeasure be so great, O who can endure the height of his fury? who can overcome by suffering the fiercenesse of his wrath? And therefore, to shew how unspeakeable and how dangerous a thing it is for any man to define, what the unspeakeable sufferings, and the incomprehensible feelings of Christ were, both in the Garden or Gethsemane, before his Iudges, and especially upon the Crosse in Mount Calvarie; the Fathers of the Greeke Church in their Lyturgie, after they had recounted his bloudy sweate, his shamefull crowning, his spitefull handling, and all the other particular sufferings, which are recorded by the Evangelists, they doe most excellently conclude, Δι ἀγνώστων κόπων καὶ βασάνων ἐλέησον καὶ σῶσον ἡμᾶς; By thine unknowne sorrowes, and by those infinite sufferings, incomprehensible to us, though most sensibly felt by thee, Have mercy upon us, and save us O Lord our God.

Revel 15 5.

Psal. 76. 7.

Psal. 18. v. 7. & 15.

That the sufferings of Christ were a great deale more then are expressed by the Evangelists, or then can be conceived by any man.

The Greeke Lyturgie.

And in all this, hee truely suffered, not imaginarily, as some have imagined. Sed verè languores nostros ipse tulit; But hee truely bare our infirmities, and carried our sorrowes; Not as the Priests of the Law, which were likewise said to beare the sinnes of the people; that is, typically in the figure, but truly in the fact, hee bare the punishment of them all; and that, not in outward appearance, as malicious Marcion held it, and afterwards the Manichees maintained it, as Saint Augustine saith, but as he was a man, φύσει καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, physically and truly, so hee endured and suffered all these sorrowes Verè, & sicut verus homo, Most truly, as being a true naturall man, as Aquinas saith; He did most sencibly and feelingly suffer them all; for it was not with him, as it was with the three Children in the third of Daniel, who were cast into the fiery Furnace, and yet came out, not having their haire singed, nor their coates changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them; but as Plutarch reports of Coriolanus, hee can yet shew his wounds that hee suffered, and make demonstrative expressions of his sorrowes, farre beyond the apprehension of any man to conceive them.

That he suffered truly, and not imaginarily. Levit. 10. 17.

Tertull contra Marc. l. 4. 8 Aug. d. haresibus ad Quodv. haref. 46

Dan 3. 27.

Plutarch in Coriolan.

But if any man demand, how Christ being God, could suffer any paine, seeing the Deity is subject to no passion, Heinsius answereth, that Christ suffered not in respect of the divine nature, which he had as God, but in respect of his humane nature, which hee had as he was Man; for though the Deity was in the sufferer,

Heinsius p. 81.

How the Godhead suffered not, but sustained the manhood that it might suffer.

yet was it not in the suffering, though it was in the Body of Christs passion, yet was it not in the passion of Christs body; but (as I shewed unto you before,) the humanity only suffered, and the Deity sustained it, that it might suffer; because the impotency of the one required the omnipotency of the other; Christ being a man, that he might suffer, and being a God, that he might be able so to suffer such insufferable things: and therfore we say, that Christ in respect of his Deity, remained still entire, untouched, invulnerable, impassible; and that very then, when his humanity suffered, and was dead, the Deity lived impassible, and rent the vayle of the Temple, sealed up the Sun-beames under a signet of cymmerian clouds, caused the earth to tremble, the Centurion to averre that Christ was the true and essentiall Sonne of God, and raised up the interred carkasses from their graves; and we

The humanity suffered.

say, that it was the humane nature of Christ, that stood and suffered upon the Crosse, and in the anguish of its passion, breathed out that dolefull complaint, even to the Godhead hypostatically united unto it, as well as to the Father and to the holy Spirit, saying, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And although the χαῦα, the distance betwixt these two natures be so great, and the disparity be so evident, as that the one was passible and mortall, the other impassible and immortall; yet are they so combined and united in our Saviour Christ, that although he is not one nature, yet is he but one person, one Christ, one Redeemer; and when the humanity suffered, and was buried, yet was it not, neither could it be possibly cast off, or forsaken by the Deity, unto which the links and ligaments of Gods love, had so strictly and eternally obliged it, by an hypostaticall and indissoluble union.

Mat. 27. 45.

Thus Christ, though he was God, yet as man, Dixit multa, gessit mira, pertulit dura, dura verba, duriora verbera, durissima supplicia; he bore and suffered an incredible paine, and unsufferable sorrowes; so great and so grievous, that Esaias may well call him virum dolorum, a man of sorrowes, and Ieremy may well demaund, si fuerit dolor, if ever there was, or if ever we heard of any sorrow like unto the sorrow of Christ; and yet for all these paines and sorrowes, these incredible sufferings both of body and soule, he bore them patiently, he indured them quietly, and as a Father saith, Perdidit vitam, ne perderet obedientiam; he would rather lose his life, than faile in his obedience; but as the sheepe before his shearer was dumbe, so opened he not his mouth; not for all the paines, that he indured, not for all the sorrowes that he sustained, so great was his humility, according to the greatnesse of his Majesty. But

Esa. 53. 3.

No sorrow like the sorrowes of Christ.

Esa. 53. 7.

CHAP. VII.

Of the gracious words that Christ uttered upon the Crosse.

a Of the seven gracious words that Christ uttered upon the Crosse.

FOr the second, that is, the gracious words that he uttered, while he stood crucified upon his Crosse, as all the Annals and Records of time can never shew his parallell in his sufferings, never man suffered as he suffered; so in all the books and writings of men, in all the words that were ever uttered by voice, we shall find not one saying equalizing any one of the sayings of Christ; Never man spake as he spake; his owne enemies confesse it; and as his words were ever gracious; so never more gracious than now upon the Crosse; For

Iohn 7. 46.

First, in the midst of all his sufferings, the first words that he spake, were not against any man, but an earnest suit for his greatest persecutors; Pater, ignosce illis, id est, illis qui dixerunt crucifige; Father forgive them, for they know not what they do.

In which prayer you may observe these two particulars.

1 The request.
2 The reason.

And

1 Who prayed. 2 To whom 3 For whom 4 Where 5 When 6 How 7 After what manner } he prayed.

1 Touching Christs prayer consider these seven speciall points

1 The Person praying was the Sonne of God, and therefore most worthy to be heard, we need not doubt of his obtaining, we need not feare that he was denied.

1 The person praying.

2 The Person to whom he prayeth is his Father, who was most powerfull to grant, because God, and most willing, because his Father; for as Lord is a name of severity and justice, so Father is a name of pitie and mercy; and therefore when he saith, Father forgive them, it is all one as if he had said, as I am thy Sonne, and am in all things obedient to thee as to my Father, so I beseech thee heare my prayer, as a father heareth his sonne; for if thou wilt not heare the prayer of thy Sonne, whose prayer wilt thou heare?

2 To whom he prayed.

3 The persons for whom he prayed were them, not him; for if he had said, forgive him, he might have put all the Church in an uproare, and all the world in confusion, by still doubting who were condemned, and who were pardoned; because then we should not have knowne whether he had pardoned Iudas that sold him, or Herod which scorned him, or Pilate which condemned him, or Cayaphas which blasphemed him, or S. Peter which denied him; but when he saith, forgive them, he sheweth that he not only prayed for his tormentors, but also for al sinners; and therfore every soul hath a part in this prayer, and if this prayer was profitable for them, that neither prayed with him, nor intreated him to pray for them; then how much more availeable will it be for us, if we pray unto him that he would pray unto his Father for us? For these unfortunate Iewes, this cursed people cried out for a cruell curse against themselves, saying, his bloud be upon us; the bloud of God, a heavy case; they knew not what they said; and therefore he appeales from their desires, and would not consent unto their reprobate request, but incountred the same with this mercifull prayer, Father forgive them; and if he be so mercifull to save those, that would be damned, then may we be sure of pardon, if we do earnestly desire that we may be saved.

3 For whom he prayed.

Rabanus in Mat.

That Christ here prayed for all sinners.

What hope we may conceive from this prayer.

4 The place where he prayed was upon the altar of the crosse; when he offered up himselfe as a sacrifice unto his Father, he onely desires this of his Father for us; and how canst thou deny him a gift worth a penny, which presents thee a jewell worth a thousand pounds? And therefore seeing Christ doth now give himselfe unto his Father for us, his Father cannot denie him to forgive us our sinnes.

4 The place where he prayed.

5 The time when he prayed was in his greatest extremities and extreamest agonies, in the midst of his torments, when he was drawing neare to death; and you know the request of a dying child is most available, and doth make the deepest impression in the tender brest of a loving father.

5 The time when he prayed.

6 How he made his prayer, in respect of the forme and quality thereof, is a speciall thing to be considered; for 6 The quality of his prayer.

First, when he prayed for himselfe, he said, if it be possible, if thou wilt, or if it may be; but here he prayeth positively and absolutely, Father forgive them; there he was contented, as it seemes, if God would, to be denied, when he prayed for himselfe, against his owne passion; but here he will have no deniall, when he prayeth for his enemies, that God would pardon their transgressions; And this is to teach us,

1 Absolutely.

What we learne thereby.

1 That when we pray for the remission of our sinnes, and other like spirituall graces, we may and should do it absolutely without condition; because this doth alwaies tend to Gods honour and our good; but when we pray for or against life or death, health or sickenesse, and the like, we should ever submit our selves to the will of God; because we know not how farre these may tend to the glory of God and our comfort.

1 Lesson.

For what we may pray absolutely.

2 That whensoever we do forgive our enemies, we should do it absolutely, without

2 Lesson.

How we ſhould forgive offences to our neighbours without reſervation, without condition; becauſe a Chriſtian forgiveneſſe muſt be without exception; and therefore Hugo ſaith, that he will never call that a Chriſtian remiſſion, when we do it under ſuch conditions, as not to ſpeak to him, not to paſſe by his gate, not to ſtay where he is, or the like.

2 Preſently.

2 When he praid here for his enemies, he ſaith, forgive them, that is, preſently, deferre not thy mercy, delay not the pardon of their ſinnes; for though I am neare my death, yet I can not die, nay, I will not die, untill thou granteſt me, that thou wilt pardon them; and therefore, O my Father, hold me no longer in torments, but forgive them now, even now, that I may give my ſelfe to reſt.

3 Vniverſally.

3 He ſaith, forgive, not this ſinne, or that ſinne, but ſimply, forgive them what ſinne or ſinnes ſoever they be, great or ſmall, paſt, preſent, or to come; for his perſecutors had not finiſhed all their villanies; they had not yet offered the vinegar unto his taſt, nor opened his ſide with the ſpeare, nor fully ſpitted out all the gall of their deriſion againſt him; and yet for all theſe ſinnes, yet to come, as well as thoſe that are paſt, he ſaith, Father forgive, and forgive them all theſe ſinnes.

7 In what geſture he prayed.

7 And laſtly, you muſt obſerve after what manner, in reſpect of his poſture and geſture, he made this prayer; for it was, like another Moſes, with his hands ſtretched out towards heaven, with his body all imbrued in bloud, with ſtrong cries, and with many teares, ſaith the Apoſtle; for that muſt needs be a violent voice, that was to be heard for all men, and that muſt be as lowd a crie, that muſt ſilence all the clamours of all ſinnes: and therefore Chriſt ſprinkled his ſacrifice with bloud, and he watered his prayers with teares, and he breathed forth many heavy ſighs and bitter grones, that ſo his bloud which was ſo abundant, his cries that were ſo ſtrong, his teares that were ſo plentifull, and his love that was ſo vehement, might mollifie his Fathers heart, and yeeld to his requeſt, to forgive them their ſins, as he deſired.

Heb. 5.

2 The reaſon of the requeſt of Chriſt.

2 He doth not onely pray for theſe ſinners, but he doth alſo plead their caſe, and ſhew reaſons unto his Father, why his prayer ſhould be heard, and their ſinnes ſhould be pardoned, becauſe they knew not what they did; and ſo now, he doth play the part of an advocate, as formerly he had diſcharged the office of an Interceſſour; and in both he approved himſelfe the deareſt friend and ſweeteſt Mediatour in the world; for though the Iewes had ſought after many accuſations againſt him, and could find none; yet he, on the other ſide, ſeeks by all meanes how to excuſe them, and beſides ignorance he could find none, that might either extenuate their malice, or leſſen their ſinne; for it is obſerved by Guevara, that the Iewes did five notorious injuries unto Chriſt, at the the time of his death, whereof the leaſt of them deſerved not only to be left unpardoned, but alſo to be condemned into eternall fire.

Chriſt our Advocate.

Antonius Guevara de 7 verbis Chriſti in cruce c. 8.

Five notorious cruelties which the Iewes ſhewed at the death of Chriſt.

1 Injury.

1 In preferring Barrabas before Chriſt, and preſerving him, that was the murderer of men, and condemning him that was the Sonne of God, and ſo judging him the honeſter and the better man, which killed thoſe that lived, than that great Prophet, which raiſed thoſe that were dead; indeed, if the choice had been to be made betwixt two theeves, two murderers, or any other two ſtrangers or malefactors, it had not been ſo great a wonder if they had erred in their choice; but if you compare theſe two, you ſhall find Chriſt a Reliever of the poor, Barrabas a theef; Chriſt a quiet man & a peace-maker, Barrabas a ſeditious fellow, and a ſower of ſedition; Chriſt a great Preacher, Barrabas a great robber; Chriſt the Maſter of all good men, Barrabas the captaine of all ſcandalous men; Chriſt healed the ſick, Barrabas wounded the whole; Chriſt reſtored their limbs unto the lame, Barrabas maimed and lamed thoſe that had all their limbes; and in a word, Chriſt was the giver of life, and Barrabas was the inſtrument of death; and yet for all this, ſo dark was their blindneſſe, ſo great was their malice, and ſo bewitched were their hearts, that they choſe Barrabas before Chriſt, and condemning the innocent, they do quit and let go the guilty. O that my love unto thee, ſweet Chriſt, were ſo great as their malice and hatred towards thee!

To preferre Barrabas before him.

The compariſon betwixt Chriſt and Barrabas.

2 In

2 In choosing no base village, not Bethany, but such an eminent place as Ierusalem, to put him to that scandalous death; for Seneca tels us, that there cannot be a greater grief to a shamefast man, and of a valiant courage, than to see himself despised, where he hath beene honoured, and contumeliously handled, where he hath been highly esteemed; but Christ by his preaching, and miracles, and friends, was so well knowne in Ierusalem, and so exceedingly beloved of all that were good, that it could not choose but be an exceeding great griefe unto him, to be led by his enemies in the sight of his friends, through the same streets, to be crucified in Mount Calvarie, in which he was wont to be both honoured and admired for his miracles, and through which he had often passed to preach in the Temple.

2 Injury, to condemne him at Ierusalem.

3 In putting him to death, not privately in his chamber, or secretly by night, but openly in the day time, in a bright day, saith Damascen, that he might be the better seen of all, and not unknown of any, and a long day, saith S. Cyprian, that they might have time, in the same day, to accuse him, to condemne him, and to crucifie him; and the chiefest time of that day, not in the morning, saith S. Chrysostome, because then all men were not up, nor at night, because all would be then at rest, nor in the evening, because many would be then in their lodgings, but they brought him forth at one of the clock, they condemned him at three, they crucified him at six, just about * noone, and murdered him at nine, when all men would be abroad; and all this was done, because they desired as much to discredit him, as to crucifie him.

3 Injury, to put him to death so publikely.

* For the Iewes reckoned not their houres as we do; but began with the first houre of the day, and so forth.

4 In crucifying him not alone, but with the company of two arrand theeves, and putting him in the midst of them, as if he had been the greatest, and the ringleader of the rest, saith Albertus.

4 Injury, to associate him with theeves.

5 In prescribing to the Iudge what death he should die; for it is the custome of all places, that the Iudges which give sentence, and not the accusers which do prosecute, should appoint what death should be inflicted upon the offenders; and yet, lest Pilate should be pitifull, and put him to some easier death, as to cut his throat, or throw him into a well, or hāg him as we use to do, these men must needs cry out, what death they would have him die; for when Pilate asked them, what should be done to Iesus, they all cried out with a lowd voice, crucifie him, crucifie him; and so both in preventing the Iudge, and prescribing the torment, as in all things els, they shewed themselves to be as they were, Iewes, malicious Iewes, hatefull, and hating both God and man.

5 Injury, in choosing for him the vilest and the cruellest death.

And yet notwithstanding all this, and much more that might be said of them, our blessed Lord doth not onely pray for them, Father, forgive them, but also plead for them, for they know not what they do, that is, neither what good they do hereby unto the Church, nor what evill they deserve unto themselves, nor yet what glory they procure unto me.

And as this was most true in them, so it is as true in all sinners, that they are blind, and know not what they do; for if they did truly know what it was to violate the goodnesse of God, to defile the beauty of the soule, to incurre the losse of eternall glory, and to oblige themselves to everlasting torments, they would rather adventure upon a thousand deaths, than once commit any sordid sin.

All sinners know not what they do.

And so you see how, when the Iewes raged against Christ, Christ prayed for them, saying, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do.

Which is a lesson never to be forgotten, to teach us all to be ever ready, not only to forgive, but also to pray for our enemies; for here we see Christ prayes for them, which mocke and persecute him; and therefore we must do likewise, if we will be Christians: And this may serve also for our exceeding comfort; for if he thus prayed for them that not onely crucified him, but also cursed themselves, saying, His bloud be upon us and upon our children; yea, if his prayer was so effectuall for his persecutors, that it brought three thousand soules of them unto his Father at the hearing of one Sermon of S. Peter, and made Saul, that most violently breathed out slaughters against his Church, to serve him most faithfully while Bern. Heb. 2. serm. 5. How effectuall was the prayer of Christ. Acts 2. 3.

Chrys. in Mat. hom. 88. Mar. 27.44.

while he breathed upon the earth, and caused that very Souldier (as some think) which pierced his breast, to be converted by his Spirit, and to become a Christian, a Professour, a faithfull Bishop, and a constant Martyr of Christ; then what may we think that he will do, or how powerfull will be his prayers for them that serve him, for them that love him?

The second saying of Christ upon the Crosse.

Luke 23.42.

Secondly, after that the theeves had most contemptuously mocked and flouted him, as S. Matthew testifieth; one of them seeing and considering not only how undeservedly he was condemned, but also how patiently he indured all his paines, and how piously he prayed for his greatest enemies; he began to relent, and to repent him of his former reviling of him, and to conceive some hope of some favour from him, and said, Lord remember me when thou commest into thy kingdome; our Saviour presently answered, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise; a most sweet and comfortable answer, unto a most comfortlesse malefactor: No sooner had he requested, but he obtained pardon, and was acquitted from the death of his soule, though he suffered the death of his body; yea, and when he desired but to be remembred, he was granted presently to be admitted unto everlasting happinesse; for This day (saith Christ) shalt thou be with me in paradise; and from a malefactor on the Crosse, thou shalt be translated to be a Martyr in heaven. To teach us, To give to them that aske, and from them that seeke, never to turne away our face; and to assure us that if we pray to God, we shall be heard, we shall be helped.

Verse 43.

I confesse I have been very large in all my former points, yet I must needs beg leave to inlarge this point also; and I hope the labour either of my writing, or your reading of it will not be fruitlesse; the principall heads shall be

Two points to be considered.

1 The thiefs request unto our Saviour Christ.
2 Our Saviours readinesse to grant his desire.

1 The thiefs request.

The first is set down in these words, Lord remember me when thou commest into thy kingdome.

Wherein you may observe,

1 Who spake these words.

1 Who spake these words, a thiefe, for you may note that while Christ did hang upon the crosse, there were foure kinds of people that did speake unto him.

Foure sorts of people spake to Christ on the Crosse.
1 Hangmen.
2 Iewes.
3 The evill theef.
4 The good theef.

1 The hangmen which said, Thou which destroyest the Temple.

2 The Iewes, which said, If thou beest the Sonne of God, come downe from the Crosse.

3 The naughty theife, which said, Save thy selfe and us.

4 This good thiefe, which said, Lord remember me.

And it is observed by Ubertinus, that the Scripture telleth us neither who this thiefe was, nor whence he was, nor what age he was of, nor what Law he observed, nor of what stocke he descended, nor in what countrey he was nourished; because Pilate being a Roman Iudge, could as well crucifie the Gentiles as the Iewes; and this was to teach us, that although for worldly preferment, we will inquire of what age, what kindred, and what countrey the man is of, yet in the case of salvation, God respecteth not whether we be young or old, noble or ignoble, rich or poore, so we lay hold upon Iesus Christ.

2 To whom these words were spoken.

2 To whom he spake them, to Christ, where you may see, that although Christ was poore in his life, and naked at his death, deprived of his liberty, and fastened to the Crosse, yet this theefe doth ascribe unto him power and authority, justice and liberality, and many other attributes of his Deity.

3 What was spoken.

3 What he said, not, take me from the crosse, or unloose me from my bands, or preserve my life, or restore my credit, or revenge me on mine enemies, or any other such like request, but Lord remember me; whereupon S. Ambrose saith, that as he had formerly taught the Synagogue how to steale, so now he teacheth us the Church of Christ how to pray, because the Lord knoweth what to give, better than we can tell what to ask.

4 Where these words were spoken.

4 Where he spake this, upon the Crosse, when he felt most paine, and could not look for any ease.

5 When

5 When they were ſpoken.

5 When he ſpake theſe words; even then when he was at the point of death, and ready to yeeld up the ghoſt.

All which particulars, with many other circumſtances that I might obſerve, would affoord us many excellent leſſons, if I durſt preſume upon your patience to recite them.

But to proceed,

2 The readineſſe of our Saviours anſwer.

2 Our Saviours readineſſe to anſwer the thiefes requeſt, is ſet downe in this ſecond word that he ſpake upon the croſſe, This day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe.

O ſweet Ieſus! Whom doſt thou anſwer? A thiefe; how then canſt thou deny to anſwer an honeſt man? And what doſt thou promiſe unto this thiefe? A kingdome; and doſt thou give a kingdome to him that hath robbed and ſtollen all his life time, and wilt thou deny them that have followed thee from their youth, and ſerved thee from their childhood? by no means; for ingratitude is a monſter in nature, and though there is no vice in the world, which hath not roome and entertainement in ſome kingdome or other, as pride among the Babylonians, envy among the Iewes, anger among the Thebans, covetouſneſſe among the Tyrians, gluttony among the Sydonians, lying among the Cretians, witchcraft in Theſſalie, Magicke in Egypt, and other ſinnes ſo well knowne, that I need not name them, in Spaine, France, Germany, England, and Ireland; yet ingratitude is ſuch a ſinne, that no countrey will willingly receive it, nor any man entertaine it into his houſe; for though thou ſhouldeſt be ingratefull unto thy neighbour, yet canſt thou not indure that any man ſhould be ingratefull unto thy ſelfe; and therefore though Pharoahs butler was very ingratefull unto Ioſeph, Laban unto Iacob, Saul unto David, Ioaſh unto Iehojada, Demetrius unto Ionathas, Auguſtus unto Cicero, Carthage unto Hanniball, Rome to Scipio, and many more, that either baniſhed or murdered thoſe, that protected and preſerved them from ruine; yet Chriſt would not onely free himſelfe from ſuch a hideous and moſt odious vice, by requiting the thiefes confeſſion with ſuch a large and free promiſe of retribution; but he doth alſo ſhew himſelfe herein the moſt unparallel'd Authour of all grace and goodneſſe; for he doth a great deale more for him than he deſerved, and he gives him more than he deſired; as he is to us all, more liberall in giving, than we are in asking; for though the thiefe ſaith but, Lord remember me when thou commeſt into thy kingdome: yet our Saviour ſaith, This day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe; ſo readily do I anſwer to thy demaund, and ſo ſpeedily will I give thee a kingdome. O good God! In old time thou didſt uſually promiſe to recompence all the ſervices done unto thee, either by increaſing their wealth, or prolonging their dayes, or delivering them from warre, or ſaving them from plagues, or with ſome ſuch other outward bleſſings, but now having overcome the ſharpeneſſe of death, thou openeſt the kingdome of heaven to all believers, and thou ſaiſt unto the thiefe, This day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe. Where you may obſerve,

The particular ſinnes of particular nations.

Ingratitude how odious.

Examples of ingratitude.

Bounty of Chriſt.

The promiſes of the old Teſtament

The particulars about Chriſt his anſwer.

1 The preface.

1 The preface of his ſpeech, Amen diso tibi, Verily I ſay unto thee; Where you muſt obſerve, that Moſes ended all the curſes of the Law with Amen, but he added not Amen to their bleſſings; the ſynagogue being not worthy of that priviledge, and God reſerving the ſame for Chriſt to beſtow it upon his Church; and Chriſt beginneth to bleſſe his Church with Amen, and he uſeth the ſame fifty five times in the Goſpell, and it is as much as in truth, equivalent unto an oath; and the reaſon why he uſeth this word here, is rendered by S. Cyprian, becauſe that which Chriſt promiſed, was ſo great a matter as paradiſe; he to whom he promiſed it, was ſo grievous a ſinner as a thiefe; he which promiſed it, was of ſo ſmall account as a crucified man; the place where he promiſed it was ſo infamous as the croſſe; and the people before whom he promiſed it were ſo vile as the Iewes; therefore to aſſure the thiefe of the performance, he ſweares unto him before he promiſeth.

Deut. 28.

The different uſe of Amen in the Old and New Teſtament.

2 The speaker.

3 The spoken to.

4 The place.

5 The time.

6 Before whom.

2 The speaker, Ego, I, that is, Christ the Sonne of God.

3 The person to whom he spake it, tibi, to thee, the thiefe that was crucified with him.

4 The place where he spake it, upon the crosse.

5 The time when he spake it, when he was ready to depart out of this world.

6 The people before whom he spake it, his friends, his foes, and all other beholders whatsoever.

7 The substance of his speech, This day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

And these particulars would likewise affoord matter for a large discourse.

A question discussed.

Quest. But here comes a great doubt to be discussed, and a hard question to be resolved, how it comes to passe, that Iudas, which (no doubt) had both prayed, and fasted, and preached often, and bestowed much almes upon the poore, and followed Christ at least three whole yeares, should be sent from the gallowes unto his torments; and this thiefe, which had robbed, and perhaps murdered many poore, innocent, and harmlesse people, and had seen Christ scarce three houres, should be admitted from the crosse unto paradise? For if God should take a kingdome, as he did from Saul, which was a naughty man, and give it to another, as he did to David, which was better than he, the reason would appeare just; but as the Duke of Burgundy took away some offices from some men that fled the field when he lost the battell, and gave them unto others that had fled ten leagues beyond them, as Comines saith; so to take away the kingdome from one thiefe to bestow it upon another thiefe, seemeth a hard point.

Charles Duke of Burgundy what he did.

The answer of the Papists.

Resp. To this Antony de Guevara maketh answer, that Christ did this, because Iudas his demerits were very great, and the thiefes merits were not small; and to prove the same, he setteth down both the vices of the one, and the graces of the other; And I think no man will deny either the one or the other; for

1 The vices of Iudas.

1 Iudas was a thiefe, an hypocrite, a traytor, a murderer, and I know not what worse could be in any man, than was in this man; and therefore, perditio tua ex te, thy destruction, O Iudas, is from thy selfe, and thy demerits have been such and so great, that God is justified when thou art condemned. And

2 The vertues of the good thiefe.

2 For the vertues and the graces of the good thiefe, I know they are very great, and very many, as

1 The faith which he had, that was very great.
2 The words which he spake, that were heavenly.
3 The blood which he shed, that was abundant.
4 The confession which he made, that was very honest.
5 The charity which he shewed, that was exceeding fervent.
6 The prayer which he uttered, that was most zealous.

1 His faith. Iames 2.

1 Faith is the root of all vertues, and although the Apostle saith, that faith without works is dead, yet S. Cyprian saith, he had rather do sinfull workes being a faithfull Christian, than vertuous works being a faithlesse Pagan; For in believing little, men come to offend much; and therefore Iudas for want of faith did hang himselfe, and the thiefe was saved, because he believed.

The faith of the thiefe compared with the faith of others. Gen. 17. 1. & Chap. 18 1.

But if we compare the faith of this thiefe with the faith of others, we shall see the same farre exceeding theirs; for Abraham saw God, who spake to him from heaven, and used him familiarly as his friend; but Christ never spake unto the theefe, neither did he ever see Christ sitting in heaven, but onely hanged upon the Crosse; Moses saw God when he spake unto him out of the bush, which he saw burning but not wasting; but the theefe saw Christ laden with thornes, which burned not at all, but pierced all his head; Esay saw God sitting upon his throne, and beset with thousands of Seraphims round about him; but the theefe never saw Christ otherwise than crucified, and accompanied with poore theeves; S. Peter saw Christ walking upon the waters, but the theefe saw him bathed in blood; Mary Magdalen saw Christ raising her brother Lazarus from death to life; but the theefe never saw Christ raise the dead, but himselfe dying

Exod. 3. 2. & v. 12.

Esay 6. 1.

Mat. 14. 26. Iohn 11. 44.

dying upon the crosse like a malefactor; S. Iames saw Christ transfigured on mount Tabor, when the Fathers of the old Law did adore him, but the theefe saw him disfigured on mount Calvary, when confusion went over his face, and his foes did scorne and deride him; and therefore though the faith of these men was great, yet the faith of the theefe seems to be the greater; because that is ever counted the greatest faith, where there is least reason to induce us to believe. Mat. 27. 2.

2 The words which he spake were a heavenly Sermon, the Pulpit was the Crosse, the auditory were the Iewes, the Theame was, dost thou not feare God? And the parts of his Sermon were these foure? 2 The Sermon of the theefe contained foure parts.

1 A reprehension of the wicked theefe, for not fearing God, Neq; tu Deum times? 1 Part.

2 A confession of his owne sinnes, and the sinnes of his fellow, Nos quidem justè patimur. 2 Part.

3 A just defence of Christ his innocency, Hic autem quid mali fecit? 3 Part.

4 A most earnest petition for the remission of his sins, and to receive mercy at the hands of God, Domine memento mei. 4 Part.

3 Though he began to suffer like a theefe and a robber, yet from the moment that he defended Christ, he suffered like a glorious Martyr, saith S. Ambrose; for now he did confesse him, when all denied him, he praised him, when all blasphemed him, he accompanied him, when all forsook him, and he defended him, when all men accused him.

4 He did not onely excuse Christ, but also accuse himselfe and his fellow theefe, saying, thou and I do suffer justly, because our torment is but according to our offence, but this man, what hath he done? And this confession was made in mount Calvary, not in the Temple, upon the Crosse, not at the Pulpit, publikely, not secretly, and with a lowd voice, not in any muttering wise; and therefore it is an argument of a very honest mind, not to know how to accuse another, nor to excuse himselfe; for Seneca writing to Lucilius, saith, our newes from hence are, that the walls of Rome are ruined, our Temples not visited, the Priests fled, the treasure robbed, old men are dead, young men are wicked, and vices are lords over all; and if these seeme great faults, we have yet greater, especially that no man doth confesse himselfe culpable of any of these, but the Dictator layeth the blame upon the Consull, the Consul upon the Censor, the Censor upon the Pretor, the Pretor upon the Edile, and the Edile upon the Questor; and therefore, because no man doth confesse his fault, we never hope of any amendment. 4 The confession of the theefe. Seneca ad Lucilium. The practice of officers.

5 His charity towards his fellow-theefe was so great, that he used all meanes to bring him unto the sight of his sinnes, to believe in Christ, and so to obtaine remission of his faults. And 5 The charity of the theefe.

6 His prayer was penitent, humble, faithfull, and short, but yet most materiall and very fervent; and because he had nothing in the world but his heart and his tongue, for his eyes were covered, his hands nayled, and his feet fastned unto the Crosse, his honour he had lost, his life was at an end, his money the jaylor had, and his coat the hangman took; therefore he believed in Christ with his heart, and confessed him with his tongue to be the Sonne of God. 6 The prayer of the theefe.

And these, with the like, saith Guevara, with the rest of the Iesuites, were the vertues and graces, for which this good theefe deserved to be received into favour, to have his sinnes pardoned, and paradise promised him.

But though I do confesse these things were most excellent graces, yet to say that hereby he merited any thing at Gods hand, I do utterly deny; for I demand, whence he had these graces? Were they not all given and most freely given by God? And might not God as well have given them unto Iudas or to the other theefe, as to him? Or did this theefe merit these graces at the hands of God? by no means. And therefore these are but shadowes to blind the eyes of the ignorant, and I say that neither men nor Angels can yeeld us any other reason of this, but what S. Paul alledgeth out of Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy; The true answer, why the theefe received grace and glory.

for as for this cause he stirred up Pharaoh to make his power knowne, so for this cause he stirred up this theefe, to shew in him the greatnesse of his power, that now, when the Iewes tooke away his life, he was able to give unto this theefe eternall life, and to make knowne to all the world the exceeding riches of his grace and mercy towards men, that whensoever they do repent them of their sins, and confesse their faults, they shall find pardon at the hands of God.

The third saying of Christ upon the Crosse. Iohn 19.26,27.

Thirdly, after he had thus kindly dealt with his foes, he turnes himselfe unto his friends, and saith unto his Mother, Woman, behold thy Sonne, and to his beloved Apostle S. Iohn, he saith, Behold thy Mother; to shew that as never man so pitied his foes, so never man so loved his friends as he did, and to teach us by his example, neither in prosperity, nor in adversity, to forget that duty which we do owe unto our Parents.

But here I must begge leave to insist a little upon these words, and to treat of these two points.

Two points handled.

1 Of the occasion of these words.
2 Of the words themselves.

In the first part we may note these three particulars.

1 The occasion, wherein three things.

1 Quis vidit, Who saw them.
2 Quos vidit, Whom he saw.
3 Vbi vidit, Where he saw them.

1 The person seeing.

1 The person seeing was a persecuted man, betrayed, scourged, condemned, crucified, & ne quid deesset passionis acerbitati, he seeth his mother under his crosse, which must needs be a great griefe unto his mind.

The state of man in this life miserable.

And this sheweth unto us the true state of miserable man, while he lives in this vale of miseries, to be full of misteries; even as one drop of raine followes another, or as one wave wallowes in the necke of another, so doth one affliction follow after another unto all the sonnes of Adam, and especially to the sonnes of the second Adam; because judgement begins with them of the house of God, and never ends with them untill it brings them untotheir graves. And

Here are three especiall witnesses to testifie this truth unto us, Christ, Mary, Iohn.

Three witnesses of it.

1 Christ, the true and naturall Sonne of God.
2 Mary, the holy and blessed Mother of God.
3 Iohn, the best beloved Apostle of Iesus Christ.

Christ nailed to the crosse, the other standing by the crosse, all afflicted with no little crosse. For

1 Christ. Lam. 3.12,13.

1 Christ might justly say to his Father, as Ieremy saith in the person of Christ; Thou hast bent thy bow, and set me as a marke for the arrow, thou hast compassed me with gall, thou hast filled me with bitternesse, and thou hast made me drunken with worme-wood; and therefore all ye that go by, behold and consider, Si fuerit dolor sicut dolor meus.

2 Mary. Luke 2.35

2 For Mary, old Simeon told her, that a sword should pierce through her soule, and if ever it pierced her heart, it did it then, when she saw her only Sonne crucified; because parents do most tenderly affect, and most affectionately love their children, as we may apparently see in the example of Iob, who seemed little moved at the newes of all his losses, but when he heard of his childrens death, he could conceale his sorrow no longer; and so of David likewise, who could patiently beare the persecutions of Saul, and the railings of Shemei, but cried out at the death of Absolon, O Absolon my sonne, would I had died for thee, O Absolon, my sonne; and yet neither Iob nor David saw the death of their children; for if they had, then would it have added griefe unto their sorrow; because the sight of miseries doth more intenerate our hearts, and works greater compassion in us, than the relation of the same can possibly effect: and therefore it is said that Hagar, being cast out of Abrahams house, and wandering in the wilderneſse, and wanting sustenance to give her child, she cast him downe upon the ground, and went from him, least she should see the death of her sonne, and the anguish of his

How tenderly parents do love their children.

2 Sam. 18.33.

The sight of things how it worketh in us.

Gen 21.16.

soule

soule in dying, and shee sate downe and lifted up her voice and wept: and therefore if Hagar could not indure to see the death of Ishmael her sonne illegitimately begotten by Abraham her Master, what sorrow must we conceive did pierce the soule of the sacred Virgin to see the cruell murdering of her beloved sonne so wonderfully conceived by God her maker?

3. For Iohn, his portion was not small in this potion of affliction; for if David cryed out when he heard of the death of Ionathan, saying, Woe is me for thee my brother Ionathan, thou wert very kinde to me in thy life, thy love was wonderfull to me, passing the love of women, ô then what griefes did perplexe the soule of of this beloved Disciple, to see his loving Master, (which had so often leaned on his bosome) so cruelly handled, his joynts stretched, his hands nayled, and his heart pierced by the most bloody, barbarous, mercilesse souldiers?

3. Iohn.

2 Sam. 1. 29.

And therefore seeing Christ himselfe, which was free from all sinne, was not free from any misery, that was a misery void of sinne, nor yet these deerest servants of our Saviour Christ, let vs not thinke it strange if we be afflicted, nor yet let us, upon every little ease, sing a requiem unto our selves and dreame immunity of crosses unto our soules, saying with Babylon, I shall see no sorrow, I shall not sit as a widdowe, neither shall I know the losse of children; because God of his goodnesse hath made my hill so strong, that I shall never be removed; but rather let us thinke that for our wickednesse, we can expect nothing but afflictions, while we live here in this vale of misery, and if at any time we be free from them, it is rather from Gods mercy then from our desarts; so you see the person seeing, Iesus Christ.

Esay 47. 8.

2. We are to consider Quos vidit; whom hee saw; and the Evangelists tell us, that many women followed, bewailed, and lamented Christ; and yet we reade not of one man by name, or speciall note, that followed him, but onely Saint Iohn, nor yet of any one word (that we can reade of) that Iohn spake in his Masters cause, to shew unto us, how God often times maketh his power perfect through weakenesse, and when his Apostles and Disciples dare not, he makes a multitude of these sillie women to bewaile his death; All these our Saviour saw and among these his Mother and his servant Iohn.

2 Whom Christ saw.

2 Cor. 12. 9.

3. We are to consider the place where he seeth them; and that is here expressed in these words, standing by; but how farre of or how neere unto the Crosse of Christ, it is not easily agreed upon by all Christians; and the reason is in the differenr relation of the Evangelists; For

3 The place where hee saw them.

Both Matthew, Marke, and Luke doe say, that the women stood afarre of; and thence Aretius obserueth, that the Saints many times in their best actions do bewray weakenesse; because these women following Christ, which was a noble act, doe it è longinquo, with Saint Peter, timidè & tepidè, coldly and fearefully afarre of: and therefore if wee in preaching, which is a worthie worke, doe sometimes bewray humane weakenesse, as you in hearing, praying, or any other worke of Gods service, can not justifie your selves from many infirmities; yet as God passeth by our weakenesse, and being never extreame to marke what is done amisse, doth accept our willingnesse to doe him service, so should all Christians doe and deale one with another, accept of what is good, and beare with one anothers humane frailties; because, doe what we will, while we live here, we are all full of imperfections, and as the Apostle saith, in many things we sinne all.

Observ.

Infirmity in the best actions of the best men.

Iames 3. 2.

But Saint Iohn speaking of these women, saith, they were standing by, that is, juxta crucem. very neere the Crosse; for so the originall words import, that they followed him hard at the heeles, and followed him till they came παρὰ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, hard unto Christ, neere to his Crosse, even to the place where his Crosse did stand.

And therefore to reconcile the Evangelists, some say, that the blessed Virgin, and this beloved Apostle, and Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene stood neere the Crosse, hard by Christ; and the other women, which lamented Observ. The Evangelists reconciled.

The degrees of love.

him stood a farre off; and from hence they doe collect the degrees of love, as of God to man, who loves not all alike, and therefore bestowes not the like graces upon all, but to some five talents, to others two, and to some but one, so of men to God, as here some follow neere and venture much for the love of Christ, others a farre of and venture lesse for him, so at all other times and places we find some, that weary themselves and labour incessantly night and day to doe all the service they can possibly doe unto their Master Christ, others some, but not so much, and so all love Christ, but not all alike, all pray, all preach, but not all so often, not all so painefull one as another.

Bellarm. exposition.

But I like best of Bellarmines answer, that these women at the first might stand afarre off, being hindered by the multitude, and not suffered by the souldiers to presse neere unto their Saviour; but afterwards, when the throng began to bee abated, and the multitude lessened, they drew neere unto the Crosse; els how could Mary and Iohn know that Christ spake to them, if they were not neere unto him, specially because he nameth neither of them, but speaketh unto them as to parties present with him.

Which sheweth three things.

And this sheweth unto us { 1. Their modestie and discretion. 2. Their love and affection unto Christ. 3. Their perseverance and progression.

1 The modesty of the women.

1. They follow Christ, yet nihil contra decorum faciunt, they doe nothing that is unseemely; for they thrust not themselves among the throng, they rush not among the souldiers, but as it becommeth women, they modestly walke together and mournefully lament what they cannot helpe; a good lesson for all Matrons to imitate herein these godly women.

2 Their love.

2. They shew their loving faithfullnesse and faithfull love to Christ in following him to his Crosse, and never forsaking him to his death, nor yet then saith Iosephus did they cease to love him, but loved him still, and loved him more and more, notwithstanding all the miseries of his life and the ignominie of his death; for true love is like wildefire, which burnes even the water it selfe; and therefore Salomon saith, that many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drowne it.

Iosephus antiquit. 4.8.

Cantic. 8.7.

How we should love our friends.

And this should teach us how to love our friends, not to be like the little brooks in the winter season, that overflow their bankes, when all springs are full, but in the draught of summer, when all ponds are dried, so that there is most need of water, they are so emptie that they will not affoord one drop of cleere water to refresh the weary passenger, that is, to abound in faire complements all flatteries of offered services, when our corne and wine, and oyle abound, and we have no need of them, but in the time of our adversity to yeeld us not the least looke of comfort; but to be like Ruth, who said unto Naomi, intreate me not to leave thee, or to returne from following after thee; for whether thou goest I will goe, and where thou lodgest I will lodge, thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God, where thou diest will I die and there will I be buried; for he is not worthy the name of a friend, that as my shadow followeth me while the sunne shineth, but is presently vanished when the skies are over-clouded, so will love me while I am in prosperity, in grace, in favour with great ones, but when my respect is ecclipsed, or my wealth diminished will presently leave me as the summer swallow, and as the course of the world is, perhaps rise up against me, to trample him, that is trodden downe.

Ruth 1.16, 17.

Mica 3.5.

3 Their perseverance.

3. Their perseverance and progression in grace is here shewed, to teach us to doe the like, to goe on in goodnesse unto the end; of which point I have treated more at large, in The Resolution of Pilate.

And so much for the occasion of our Saviours speech.

2 The words.

2. The speech of Christ is twofold, { 1. To his Mother, Mary. 2. To his Servant, Iohn. }

For

For the firſt, wee are to conſider two things, { 1. The manner of his ſpeech. 2. The matter of his ſpeech.

1 To his Mother.

{ 1. The manner, in the word of compellation, Woman;
2. The matter is full of conſolation, behold thy ſonne.

1 The Compellation. Luke 2.43. Iohn 19.25. Iohn 2.4.

1. It is obſerved, that in all the writings of the New Teſtament, though the Evangeliſts call her divers times the Mother of Ieſus, yet doth he himſelfe never call her Mother, but alwaies Woman, as Woman what have I to doe with thee, mine houre is not yet come, and here, Woman behold thy ſonne.

And this gave occaſion of ſtumbling unto divers heretickes, becauſe they knew not the reaſons why hee calleth her Woman, and not Mother; for hee did not this, becauſe hee was not her true and naturall ſonne, as the Heretickes dreamed, or becauſe hee diſdained to call her Mother; for hee that was ſo dutifull unto his parents in all things, would never uſe any title of unreverence unto his Mother, and hee that perfectly performed the royall law, would never faile in the fulfilling of the firſt Commandement of the ſecond Table of the Morall law, and the Commandement with promiſe, as the Apoſtle noteth; and therefore he calleth her not Mother, to denie her any title of honour, that as Mother was due unto her, but he calleth her Woman, and not Mother, in a threefold reſpect.

The reaſon why Chriſt calleth his Mother Woman threefold.

{ 1. Of his enemies. 2. Of her ſelfe. 3. Of his ſervants. } For

1. His enemies ſuppoſed he was but a meere man, the ſonne of Ioſeph and Mary, and therefore they Iudged he blaſphemed, when he ſaid that hee was the Sonne of God; and therefore, leaſt, if he had called her Mother, it might happily have confirmed them in their error, he ſaith unto her, Woman, behold thy ſonne, that hereby they might underſtand he was of greater birth and higher calling then the Sonne of Ioſeph and Mary.

1 Reaſon. Beza in hom. paſſ. 19.

2. The name of Father or Mother, uſed by a childe in diſtreſſe, doth ingeminate the ſorrow and griefe of the parents, becauſe it is a name ſo full of love, ſo full of affection, ſo full of doleſull commiſeration; In which reſpect Chriſt not onely in his agony ſaith, Father if it be poſſible let this cup paſſe from me, but alſo exhorteth every Chriſtian in his miſery to ſay, Our Father which art in heaven, that ſo the very name of a Father might move him the more conſiderately to commiſerate us: therefore Chriſt would not call her Mother, leaſt the name of Mother, ſhould grieve her, and adde more ſorrowes unto her afflictions, * ſo willing was he to comfort her, and ſo carefull of not ſpeaking one word that might grieve her.

2 Reaſon.

Mat.26.39.

Mat.6.9.

* Quia ex commiſeratione cordis ſui meſtitiam hac voce intenderet magis quam ſedaret. Muſculus in Iohan

3. Our Saviour foreſaw, that, as many would derogate, and vilepend this ſacred Virgin, whoſe rare vertues, I dare not deſpiſe, and whoſe divine graces, I cannot but admire, the Prophet Eſay ſetting forth the ſame with an Ecce, Behold a Virgin ſhall conceive, and whom all generations ſhould call bleſſed, ſo many would adore her, and aſcribe unto her more honour then is due unto a creature, when inſteed of magnifying her they would doe little leſſe then omniſie and deifie her; and therefore ut futuræ ſuperſtitioni de advocatione Mariæ opponeret, &c. leaſt men, in future times, ſhould grow ſo ſuperſtitious, as to aſcribe that honour to his Mother, which is onely due unto himſelfe and to his Father, hee ſaith unto her, Woman, behold thy ſonne. And ſo much for the Compellation: Woman.

3 Reaſon.

Chemnitius in harm.

2. For the conſolation in theſe words, Behold thy ſon, we may ſee from hence, not only how dutifull Chriſt was to his parents, to ſubject himſelfe unto them, but alſo how carefull hee was to provide for them; and no marvell; becauſe the very precept of honouring our parents, doth include the duty of relieving their wants, the word implying maintenance as well as reverence; as honour the King, that is, not onely obey your princes, but alſo pay unto them ſuch cuſtomes, tributes, and subsidies as are requisite for the maintenance of their honour; and againe honour your wives, as the weaker vessells, that is, not onely beare with their frailties, because they are women, but also relieve them, and furnish them with all things needfull for them, because they are your wives; and so likewise, honour widdowes that are widdowes indeed, that is, not onely respect them, because they are widdowes, but also releeve them and supply their wants, because they are widdowes indeed, that is, destitute of their succour, having none other husband to care for them, but he that is in heaven, Iesus Christ.

2 The conſolation

Chriſt how dutifull to his parents.

1 Pet.2.1

To honour implieth to supply our necessities. 1 Pet. 3. 7.

1 Tim. 5. 3.

And therefore not onely Ioseph is commended for sending to fetch his Father into Egypt, and not onely for giving maintenance unto him throughout all that time of famine, but also in respect of his Fathers feebleness, for that dutifull diligence of putting meat into his Fathers mouth, or, as the Text saith, nourishing him, that is, as a little childe is nourished, saith the Glosse, or an infant is fed by his nurce, being unable to feede himselfe, because as the proverbe is, bis pueri senes, old men are twice children, and therefore, as children so must old men be clothed, supported and fedde by others, because they are unable to feede themselves, but also the Scribes and Pharisees are condemned by our Saviour Christ for corrupting the meaning of the fift Commandement, and teaching children to denie reliefe unto their needie and feeble parents; for they taught that whosoever should say unto his Father or his Mother, Corban est, that is, as all antient interpreters doe translate it, δῶρον, it is a gift, that is, it is vowed to bee bestowed and dedicated upon Gods service, or some pious uses, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, that is, whatsoever I have, that thou wantest, I have vowed to bestow it upon God; and therefore I am freed and not bound to bestow it upon you; but by this deniall of reliefe and maintenance unto their parents, though never so cunningly, under the pretence of piety, they honour not their Fathers and Mothers, but doe make the commandement of God of none effect, saith our Saviour.

The commendation of Ioseph. Gen. 47. 12.

Maldon. in loc. sequitur Hugon. & Lyra.

Mat. 15. 6.

And in very deed, the law of nature and of nations teacheth the same thing, that children are bound to relieve their parents want; because as Proclus saith, the Father is the lively character and true image of the great and soveraigne God, and the children next under God, do hold life, goods, and all they have from their parents; and therefore the Athenians (as Xenophon reports it) made a law, that if any man was knowne to have denied reliefe unto his parents, hee should never be releeved by any man, if ever himselfe did fall into decay: no, though hee died for very hunger; because they deemed it an unreasonable thing, to yeeld succour unto him, which had denied succour unto his Parents.

The Athenian Law for children to relieve their parents.

And the reason hereof is rendered by Siracides, because wee were begotten of them, and wee cannot recompence the things that they have done for us; and therfore we are bound to do what we can for them. And we should the rather do it, not onely because we are injoyned by law, but also provoked and excited by the examples of Ecclesi. 7. 28.

Examples of them that relieved their parents.

1. Christ himselfe.
2. Heathen men.
3. Vnreasonable creatures.

} For

1 Christ.

1. Here we see Christ in his greatest extremities, upon the Crosse, forgets not to care for his Mother; and yet, Christus non tantum debuit parentibus quantum cæteri homines, Christ owed not so much unto his Mother, as wee doe unto our parents, because he onely tooke his humane life from his Mother, and for amends he gave to her a treble life.

Bellar. de 7. verb. Christi.

Christ gave his Mother a threefold life.

1. Of nature, because he made her; for hee made all things that are made, and without him was not any thing made that was made. John 1. 3.

1 Of nature.

2. Of grace, because conceaving him she was full of grace; for that in him dwelled the fullnesse of the God-head bodily.

2 Of grace.

3. Of glory, because he died for her, that she through him might have eternall life.

3 Of glory.

But

But we can never recompence the paines and pangs, the feares, cares, and coſts that our Parents tooke with us; and therefore wee are the more bound to honour and to care for them, and never to forget the ſorrowes of our Mothers, as the Sonne of Sirach ſpeaketh.

2. We reade how the very Heathens have left us admirable examples for our inſtructions; for Antigonus the Sonne of Demetrius, is ſaid to have ſold his townes, lands, and jewels, to pay his Fathers ranſome, and to redeeme him out of the hands of Seleucus; and if this would not ſerve, he offered to become pledge and priſoner in his Fathers roome, ſo hee might procure his Fathers liberty; and Valerius Maximus tells us, that a man being condemned to die by famine, his daughter preſerved his life, by giving him ſucke, for a long ſeaſon; and the Magiſtrate, having learnt the truth thereof, commended the fact, and reſtored the man to his liberty for his daughters ſake.

2 Of Heathens.

Valer. Max. l. 5.

A dutifull daughter.

3. It is recorded of the Storkes, that their ſires being weake and unable to flie, they will carrie them upon their backes and provide them foode while they are able to feede.

3 Of the irrationall creatures.

And yet, as Novatus would neither beſtow bread on his Father being alive, nor burial on him being dead, ſed in vico fame mortuus, ibi remanſit inſepultus, but he ſuffered him to ſtarve and ſtinke in the ſtreete, as Saint Cyprian ſaith; ſo I feare me we have now too many of Novatus brood, that not onely neglect their parents want, and waſtefully ſpend that on harlots, Wine or Tobacco, which might indifferently relieve their need, but alſo doe add griefe unto their ſorrow, and cauſe many a teare to trickle downe the cheekes of their aged parents, when they ſcorne them, law with them, robbe them, beate them, kill them, as ſome unnaturall, ungratefull, and ungratious children have moſt wickedly done unto their owne naturall parents.

Cyprian l. 2. ep. 8.

How ungratefull many children be.

But not onely the Heathens and Pagans which knew not God, ſhall riſe in judgement to condemne ſuch execrable villanies, but alſo the dumbe beaſts which are void of reaſon, ſhall reprove the madneſſe of ſuch a viperous generation. And ſo you ſee the reſpect and care that Chriſt had to provide for his Mother, when he deſired not to relieve himſelfe: I ſhould paſſe to the ſecond part of his ſpeech to S. Iohn, but I muſt firſt reſolve two ſpeciall doubts.

2 Queſt. to be reſolved.

Queſt. 1. Why Mary is commended to Iohn, rather then to any other Apoſtle or Diſciple of Chriſt.

1 Why Mary is commended to S. Iohn.

Sol. To this Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt did this for divers good and ſpeciall reaſons; As Bellar. de 7. ver.

1. Becauſe Chriſt did foreknow, that Iohn ſhould outlive her, that ſo ſhee might not want when Iohn was dead.

1 Reaſon.

2. Becauſe he knew, that, as Iohn was the Diſciple whom he loved beſt, ſo he was moſt loving unto him, and therefore would moſt willingly doe whatſoever he could doe for his Mother.

2 Reaſon.

3. Becauſe he ſaw none but Iohn, that we reade of, that was preſent with him in this his greateſt abaſement, the reſt being all fled for feare of the rage of the High-Prieſts.

3 Reaſon.

4. Becauſe Saint Iohn was one of the three chiefeſt Apoſtles, which onely ſaw his Transfiguration, and were onely taken into the garden of Gethſemane to bee witneſſes of his bloody agony, & which S. Paul calleth pillers in Gods Church, that is, Peter, Iames, and Iohn: and therefore as he committed the Church of the Gentiles unto Saint Peter, and the Church of the Iewes unto S. Iames, ſo he commended his Mother unto S. Iohn, that ſo as he had dignified them, they might ſhew their love and duty unto him. But then

4 Reaſon.

Mat. 17. 1. Mat. 26. 39.

Queſt. 2. We are to conſider, why Chriſt commended his Mother to S. Iohn alone, and not rather to all his Apoſtles, or at leaſt to more then one.

2 Why commended to Saint Iohn alone.

Sol. To this Muſculus anſwereth, Quod multorum fidei & curæ committitur non ſatis probè curatur; that for the moſt part, that thing is neglected of all which is committed to the truſt and care of all; and ſo Ariſtotle obſerved the ſame truth long Ariſtotelis l. 2. c. 2.

That which is committed to all, is neglected by all long before, and we ſee it moſt frequent in our owne daies; feoffees in truſt, ſupervisors of wills, overſeers of Schooles, Hoſpitalls, and ſuch like, doe poſt off the truſt that is repoſed in them from one to another; and ſo while they relie to have the charge diſcharged by each other, the maine charge lieth in the duſt unregarded of all.

And therefore, becauſe particular commands doe more move then generall, Chriſt commended his Mother onely unto Iohn, and his Spouſe the Church, ſay the Ieſuites, unto Saint Peter, and ſo the Church committeth the care of every chriſtened childe unto ſome particular perſons, that ſhould more eſpecially look that they be brought up in the feare and ſervice of the Lord. And ſo much for the ſpeech of Chriſt unto his Mother, Woman behold thy ſonne.

2 The ſpeech of Chriſt to S. Iohn.

2. For the ſpeech of Chriſt unto his ſervant Iohn, we may note theſe two things,

Two things conſiderable.

1. The precept. — The precept was from Chriſt.
2. The effect. — The effect was from Iohn.

The precept, Behold thy Mother, the effect, from that houre hee tooke her to his owne home.

1 Precept.

1. In the precept we may obſerve two things,
1. Cui, to whom he ſpeaketh.
2. Quid, what he ſpeaketh.

1 To whom Mary is committed.

1. I told you before, that the perſon to whom Mary was committed, was Iohn, and yet we finde that Iohn is not named here, but onely ſignified by this note, (the Diſciple whom Ieſus loved,) and therefore I hope it will not be amiſſe to examine the reaſon of this thing;

Two points diſcuſſed.

1. Why he ſuppreſſeth his name.
2. Why hee expreſſeth himſelfe by this note, the Diſciple whom Ieſus loved.

1 Why S. Iohn ſuppreſſeth his name.

For the firſt, Aretius tells us that he concealeth his name for modeſties ſake; becauſe he would ſhunne the ſuſpition of vaine-glory; for to doe good, and to be ambitious of praiſe, is to leeſe our reward of God, becauſe we are ſo greedy to receive it, and ſo well pleaſed when wee have it at the hands of men: and therefore our Saviour ſaith, that the Phariſees which faſted, and prayed, and tythed, and releeved the poore, and did many other ſuch workes of piety and charity, that they might be ſeene of men, had received their reward, that is, the praiſe of men, and therefore that they were to expect no more, becauſe they received what they deſired; but teaching his owne ſervants how to doe good, hee ſaith, when thou giveſt almes, or intendeſt to doe any other good, blow not a trumpet to call ſpectators together, as if God would beleeve nothing that thou doſt without witneſſe, or thou not beleeve him, that he will reward thee, if thou haſt no witneſſes of thy deeds, but rather doe it ſo ſecretly and ſo privately, that thy right hand know not what thy left hand doth; ſo he that ſeeth in ſecret will reward thee openly.

That we ſhould ſhun pride and vaine-glory. Mat. 6.

And therefore though vaine-glorious Phariſees thinke all that they doe loſt, unleſſe it be ſeene of men; yet doe the Saints and Servants of Chriſt deſire rather to conceale their workes then to proclaime them unto the world; they will do their beſt not with eye-ſervice as men-pleaſers, but to diſcharge a good conſcience in the ſight of God, and if men ſee it not, regard it not, reward it not, they care not, becauſe they ſay with the Prophet, merces mea apud Deum, my reward is with God, which ſeeth the ſincerity of my heart, and therefore will ſee that I ſhall not goe unrewarded.

2 Why S. Iohn expreſſeth himſelfe by this title.

For the ſecond, though he ſuppreſſeth his name, as regardleſſe of praiſe, yet he expreſſeth himſelfe by this note, the Diſciple whom Ieſus loved, for two ſpeciall ends.

1 Reaſon. S. Iohns thankfullneſſe.

1. To ſhew his owne thankefullneſſe unto Chriſt.
2. To ſhew the reaſon, why Chriſt committed his Mother unto him.

1. Chriſt loved Iohn above all the reſt of the Apoſtles, and ſhewed himſelfe more familiar with him, then with any other of his Apoſtles or Diſciples whatſoever; soever; for it is said that Iohn leaned on Iesus bosome, and when Christ had said, one of you shall betray me, and the Disciples stood looking one upon another, and as it were afraid to aske him, who it should be, Saint Peter beckned unto S. Iohn that he should aske him who it should be of whom he spake, and S. Iohn as most familiar with him saith, Lord, who is it? And therefore S. Iohn in token of his gratefull minde for so great love, delights to call himselfe, the Disciple whom Iesus loved, this was his joy, and for this he would not be silent. And I would to God it were so with all of us, that our chiefest rejoycing would be, not that we are great or in hope to be great in the world, but that God doth love us; and that for this his love to us, we would with Saint Iohn love to thinke of it, to speake of it, to write of it.

Iohn 13.23,24,25

It was King Davids practise ever to praise the Lord for his goodnesse, and never to receive a new mercy but he would sing a new song of praise and thanksgiving unto God, as in one Psalme he saith, Rejoyce in the Lord ô ye righteous, for it becommeth well the just to be thankefull, praise the Lord with the Harpe, sing psalmes unto him with the Lute and instrument of ten strings, sing unto the Lord a new song, sing praises lustily unto him with a good courage; and in another place he saith, Praise the Lord ô my soule, and all that is within me praise his holy name; and in all his Psalmes allmost he doth nothing els but either recapitulate Gods goodnesse towards us, or pray unto him for some mercies, or praise his name for his goodnesse; and so the blessed Virgin, when the Angell told her that shee should conceive and beare a Sonne and should call his name Iesus, because hee should save his people from their sinnes, presently saith, My soule doth magnifie the Lord and my spirit hath rejoyced in God my Saviour;

King Davids thankefullnesse.

Psal. 33.1,2,3.

The blessed Virgins thankfullnes.

And yet I feare me that wee are so farre from praising God for his mercies, that we underprize and undervalue his greatest blessings, and in steed of magnifying him for them we murmur against them, and say as the Israelites did of Manna, nauseat anima nostra, our soule loatheth this light food, we are weary of preaching, and we are tyred with the tediousnesse of their Sermons; but let us take heede, that if we delight not in Gods love, hee will delight to chastise us for our sinnes, and specially for this great sinne of unthankefullnesse.

Hosea 10.10.

2. Saint Iohn seemeth hereby to intimate and set downe two speciall reasons why Christ commended his Mother unto him.

2 Reason To intimate why Christ commended his mother to him.

1. Because he was a Disciple of Christ.
2. Because Christ loved him, for hee was the Disciple whom Iesus loved.

1. Mary no doubt had many kindred and so had Christ; and yet Christ would not commend Mary to any one, because her kindred, but to Iohn, because hee was a Disciple; for naturally a Scholler, if he hath any good nature in him, cannot choose but love his Master, because that as a childe doth sucke his nurses milke, to grow therby, so doth the scholler suck his learning from his Master to grow better and better in all wisedome; and in that respect Quintilian saith, Discipulos id unum interim moneo, ut præceptores suos non minus quam ipsa studia ament, & parentes esse non quidem corporum sed mentium credant, I advize all Disciples and Schollers, that they should no lesse love their Masters then their studies, and beleeve them to be their parents not of their bodies, but of all the learning and knowledge that they have; and therefore our Saviour Christ having chosen Iohn to bee his Disciple, and so carefully tutored him in all good precepts, and thereby obliged him to love him and to doe any service that he could doe for him, doth in that respect commend his Mother unto Iohn, not so much because he was his kinsman as because he was his Disciple, Disciples many times doing many things for a man, when his kinsmen cares not for him.

1 Because S. Iohn was his Disciple.

Quintil. Institut. Oratoriæ

The love of Schollers unto their Teachers.

And yet now (saith a learned Author) Quos Discipulos habent Evangelii Ministri? I feare wee may goe farre, before wee shall finde a Disciple that will doe any thing for the Preachers of Gods Word; but when hee hath spent himselfe as a lampe to give light to others, consumed his strength, and wasted his his time, in labours often, in travels often, in watchings often, in prayers often, in perils often, to teach unto his hearers the way unto eternall happinesse, he shall scarce find one among his many disciples, that thinks he oweth him thanks for all his paines; so great is our ingratitude, and so small is the respect that we beare unto our teachers.

Muscul. in Iohannem.

The small respect that men beare now unto their teachers.

And this is the cause, that many men do spend that time which they should do in their studies, to be inabled to feed their flock, in worldly affaires, to provide meanes to feed themselves and their families; for if they did not, they do see, themselves might starve, and their children, like vagabonds, might beg their bread.

a Because Christ loved him.

2 He gives us here to understand, that Christ commends his mother unto him, because Christ loved him; for this is a rule infallible, that whom God loveth most, he layeth most charge upon them; he requireth more paines, more patience, and more diligence at their hands, than he doth of any other; so he saith unto Ananias, that because S. Paul was a chosen vessell unto him, therefore he should suffer many things for his names sake; a course cleane contrary to the world, where we looke to be spared and eased of them that love us: Yet you see God layeth the heaviest load on them that he loveth best; and therefore if we see a man laden with paines, laden with griefes, full of sorrowes, full of sufferings, we should not, as the world is ready to judge, thinke him to be rejected, but rather the more respected of God; because, as Plato saith, Hanc rationem Deus sequitur in bonis viris, quam in discipulis præceptores, qui plus laboris ab his exigunt, in quibus certior spes est; God useth to follow the same course with his servants, as masters do with their schollers, that is, to lay the greater task, and to require the larger exercise of them, that have the better capacities.

The more God loveth us, the more task he layeth upon us.

Plat. de præcept.

And so much for the person, to whom Mary was committed.

a The charge.

2 We are to consider the charge which Christ gave unto Iohn in these words, behold thy mother; that is, receive her into thy charge, protect her from all wrongs, and relieve her in all her wants, as if she were thy mother; for questionlesse he could not choose but see her sorrowes, and perceive into what distresse she was like to fall into before our Saviour spake unto him; but it may be he thought not to relieve her, or at least wise not so lovingly to receive her, and so carefully to provide for her, as if she were his mother; and therefore our Saviour saith unto him, behold thy mother, that is, consider in what state she is, deprived of her Sonne, left destitute of all comfort, and every way unable to helpe her selfe, because she is but a poore and a friendlesse woman; and therefore be thou unto her instead of a sonne, to helpe her and to provide for her: And so from hence we may note two things.

Two things observable.

1 The state of Mary.
2 The duty of Iohn.

1 The state of Mary, that she was poore.

1 For the state of the blessed Virgin, though she was the holiest and most blessed amongst women, yet have we many arguments out of Scripture to prove that she was but a very poore woman of meane estate, as her journeying with Ioseph unto Bethlehem, her delivery in a stable, her want of company to helpe her in her travell, and her want of meanes to relieve her new-borne babe; for had Ioseph been a rich man, that had either lands or houses, he had lived upon them, and not have been forced to travell, where he might best get his meanes; or had they had riches, though no inheritance, yet should they not have been intruded into the stable among the oxen, nor have been compelled to lay their child in a manger among the beasts, which was adored of the Angels in the heavens: And this should teach us all to be contented with any state, when the best of women, the mother of Christ did live in no better state.

2 The duty of S. Iohn.

2 For the duty of S. Iohn, I have set it downe already, that it was to have a speciall care of this blessed Virgin, and to provide for her as if she were his owne mother; to teach us indeed the duty of every Christian, to relieve the members of of our Saviour Christ, who, as himselfe testifieth, are his mother, his brethren, and his sisters. Mar. 3.

And so much for the third word that Christ spake upon the Crosse. I must needs be briefer in the rest, though I desired to be much larger.

Fourthly, when he had gone over those in particular, he said, I thirst, not so much for any drinke, as for the health and salvation of us all; for this was meat and drinke unto him to do his Fathers will, to pacifie his wrath, and to satisfie his justice, and so to bring many sonnes unto glory; to teach us, that if Christ in the midst of his sorrowes did so much thirst for our health, how much more should we hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, and after the salvation of our owne soules, and not (as we do) thirst, and wither away for thirst, after the pride and pompe of these worldly vanities? The fourth saying of Christ upon the Crosse. Iohn 4 34.

Fiftly, Having shewed his love to his foes, to his friends, and to all mankind, he returned unto himselfe, (for as yet he seems to have forgotten himselfe and his owne paine, through the vehemency of his love which he bare unto others) and not onely perfectly seeing, but also sensibly feeling the incomprehensible paine and sorrow, that through the fiercenesse of Gods wrath, was throughly inflicted upon him, and which he had already so long sustained for our sinnes, he lifts up his eyes, and sends forth those words with a dolefull voice, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Not that he was or could be forsaken of the Godhead, so hypostatically united unto it, but to shew unto us, what infinite sorrowes he then suffered above all that we can conceive or thinke, and to teach us in all distresses, to have our chiefest recourse to God, and in all humility to expostulate with his Majesty, why he should create us to forsake us; for so with Christ, we may be sure to be heard and relieved in what we feare, and in good time to be delivered out of our distresse. The fift saying of Christ upon the Crosse. Mat. 27 46.

Sixtly, when Christ saw that the Scripture, in every particular thing that was written of him untill his death, was fulfilled, he said, Consummatum est, All is finished; not only to declare unto us that by his death the royall Law was fulfilled, the types, figures, and predictions concerning him were now accomplished, and the redemption of all mankind was now fully effected, but also to teach all Christians to finish the course of their life according to the will of God. The sixt saying of Christ upon the Crosse. Iohn 19.30.

Seventhly, when he considered and understood all things, that were to be done of him, to be fully ended, he saith, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; to teach every man, especially in affliction, to cast himselfe in sinum divinitatis, even into the armes of Gods protection, and so to rely wholly upon God, as upon a sure foundation, and as at all times else, so chiefly when we see death approaching neare to us, to commend our soules into the hands of God, even as our Saviour did. The seventh and last saying of Christ upon the Crosse. Luke 23.46.

Many worthy observations to bee considered in the manner of Christ his crucifying. Iohn 19.23. Psal. 22, 16.

Thus Christ suffered, thus he preached, and thus he prayed upon the Crosse; and in this time of his suffering, it is observed,

First, that as he bowed the heavens and came downe to be incarnate and made flesh; so here he boweth his head, to imbrace us, and to kisse us with the kisses of his lips. 1 Observation.

Secondly, that his armes were extended and stretched out, to receive all men, throughout the compasse of the whole world, into his grace and favour againe. 2 Observation.

Thirdly, that the nayles were fixed through his hands and feet, not only to shew that hereby thy hands are inlarged to do good works, and thy feet are set at liberty, that thou maist run the way of Gods commandement; but also to teach us how the remembrance of his passion should be so fixed in our hearts, as that nothing in the world should be able to root it thence. 3 Observation. Iohn 20.25.

Fourthly, that he was unstripped of his garments, and his body extended naked upon the tree; to shew that he forsook all to redeem us, that all things are patent and open in the eyes of God, and that we poore sinfull men are miserable, and naked of all goodnes, untill we be clothed with the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ. 4 Observation. Iohn 19.23.

5 Obſervation. Iohn 10 34.

Exod. 33. 22.

Fiftly, that his ſide was opened with a ſpeare, to make way for the effuſion of his bloud, to ſatisfie for our ſinnes, to make roome for us to come nearer to his heart, and to hide our ſelves with Moſes, in foramine petræ, in this ſluce of his ſide, in this hole of the Rocke, untill the anger of God be over-paſt. And,

Many other points of great moment I might here ſhew unto you, as the darkening of the Sun for ſhame and ſorrow to ſee the Sonne of God put to ſuch a ſhamefull death; the quaſſation and trembling of the earth, and cleaving of the ſtones, for horrour to beare their Maker dying, and to condemne the moſt cruell hardneſſe of a ſinners heart, that ſeeing the ſtones renting, will not relent for his ſinnes; and the cleaving of the Temple from the top to the bottome, to ſhew that the Leviticall Law ſhould be no longer a partition-wall betwixt the Iewes and the Gentiles, and that the way to heaven is now made open to all believers; but that to ſpeake all that I might of this point, would inlarge a Treatiſe into a Volume; and that indeed the Wit and learning of any one man, is no more able to expreſſe all the myſteries and moſt excellent points that we might collect and learne from the Paſſion of Chriſt, than one poore Fiſher-man is able to catch all the fiſhes in the Ocean-Sea.

That it is impoſſible for any one man to expreſſe all the particulars of Chriſt his paſſion.

And therefore commending all unto your meditation to muſe upon the particulars of this great worke that was once done, that it might never be forgotten, I will end this point of his Paſſion, and proceed unto the third part of my Text, which is the neceſſity of his ſuffering, For thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer.

The

The third part.

CHAP. I.

Of the necessity of Christ his suffering.

THirdly, having heard the chiefest particulars of the sufferings of Christ, we are now to consider the necessity of his suffering, expressed here by Christ himselfe, in these words, Thus it behoved Christ to suffer; Touching which, we must consider that there are three kindes of necessities.

3 Of the necessity of Christs sufferings.

That there is a threefold necessity.

The first is an absolute necessity, as when a thing, in regard of the nature of it, cannot be otherwise; so the Sun moveth, and the fire burneth (as we see) necessarily; because it is the property of their nature so to do, as it is for every light thing to ascend, and for every heavy thing to descend downewards towards the center.

1 Absolute.

The second is, a necessity of constraint, as when a malefactor is constrained and must necessarily suffer, whether he will or not; because the sentence of the Law hath passed over him, and his strength is not sufficient to save himselfe.

2 Constrained.

That Christ suffered, because he willingly gave himselfe to suffer.

And in these two senses our Saviour Christ was not of necessity for to suffer; because God might, if he had would, have used a thousand other wayes to have saved man, without the death of his only Sonne; and there was neither Law to injoyne him, nor any force that could compell him for to suffer; for he saith Abba Father, All things are possible unto thee; and, he could pray to his Father and have more than twelve legions of Angels to have assisted him: And therefore it was no absolute necessity that he should suffer, Sed oblatus est quia voluit; but he was offered up for us, because he would; he gave his soule an offering for sinne, and he yeelded up himselfe into the hands of his enemies, when he could, but would not be rescued; but gave Pilate power against himselfe; for unlesse he would, he needed not to haue suffered; Iustice could not seize upon him, because he was a Lambe without spot; and constraint could not compell him, because all things were possible unto him, and he had all the Angels at his command: and therefore as the Prophet Esay saith, that he did beare the burden imposed by his Father, so he did assume the same himselfe; and S. Paul saith, that as God gave Christ for us, Rom. 8. 32. So Christ gave himselfe for us; and our Saviour saith, No man taketh my life from me, but I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it up againe: and so it was, that he himselfe laid downe his life, as a man layeth downe his garment; for it is observed by the Evangelists, that when he would die, he seeing that impotent man could not take away his soule, he bowed downe his head, and gave up the Ghost, as calling and yeelding unto the stroke of death, which otherwise durst not, for feare, to approach unto him: and so Christ shewed his power in weakenesse; for though it be a great infirmity to die, yet so to die is an argument of infinite Majesty: and S. Hierom doth well observe, that the Centurion hearing his prayer with a lowd voice, to shew what he was, farre enough, and free enough from the touch of death, and seeing him, Statim spiritum sponte demisisse, tradidisse, (saith S. Iohn) emisisse, (saith S. Matthew) presently to have yeelded, and most willingly to have sent forth his Spirit out of his body, as Noah sent his Dove out of the Arke, Commotus signi magnitudine, being trou-

Esay 53. 10.

Esay 63 6.

Rom. 8. 32.

Gal 2. 20.
Iohn 10.

Crucem sustinuit voluntate, non necessitate. S. Hieron. in Epitaph. Nepot.

Nazian. & Bern. Ser. 4. Hebdom. Pasc.

Et quod emittitur voluntarium est, quod amittitur necessarium.

bled with the greatneſſe of that wonder, he ſaid forthwith, truly this man was the Sonne of God: So wonderfully ſtrange was this his yeelding unto death; and ſo S. Auguſtine largely expreſſeth the ſame, to ſhew unto us, that the laying downe of his life was no impoſed puniſhment againſt his will, nor any forcible invaſion of death upon him, but a voluntary ſacrificing of himſelfe for ſinne, and a tendering of his death to ſatisfie Gods wrath for our ſake.

Hieron. q. 8 ad Hedib. Aug. Tract. 119. in Ioh.

The third is not an abſolute, nor a privative, nor an impoſed neceſſity, but a voluntarily aſſumed neceſſity, a neceſſity of conveniency, in reſpect of the end, as armour and weapons are neceſſary for him that goeth forth to fight, or a neceſſity by conſequent, preſuppoſing the decree and ordinance of Almighty God: and thus it was neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, becauſe it was the beſt and moſt convenient way that God in his wiſdome ſaw fitteſt, to performe that great worke of mans ſalvation; and becauſe God had promiſed that the Meſſiah ſhould ſuffer, & ſhould be ſlaine for our ſinnes; and therefore Chriſt ſaith unto Peter, that if he were reſcued out of the hands of his enemies, How then ſhall the Scriptures be fulfilled, which ſaid, that thus it muſt be? For God had decreed, ordained, and revealed in his Scriptures, that Chriſt ſhould die.

3 Voluntarily aſſumed neceſſity.

In what ſenſe it was neceſſary for Chriſt to ſuffer. Eſay 53.

Dan 9.26. Mat. 16.54. Eſay 53.14.

CHAP. II.

The inſtrumentall and efficient cauſes of the ſufferings of Chriſt.

Of the cauſes which did neceſſitate the ſufferings of Chriſt.

BVt becauſe the neceſſity of every thing dependeth upon the cauſes that do neceſſitate the ſame, as every man muſt die, becauſe he ſinned againſt his God, and every compound body muſt be corrupted, becauſe they are all compoſed of elementary ſubſtances, and indued with repugnant qualities, therefore we muſt underſtand the cauſes which did neceſſitate Chriſt to ſuffer, if we would truly know how and why it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer.

Three cauſes of Chriſt his ſufferings.

Now for the cauſes of Chriſt his ſuffering, I find them to be manifold, and eſpecially theſe three, viz. { 1 The inſtrumentall, 2 The efficient, 3 The finall, } cauſe of his ſufferings.

1 The inſtrumentall cauſe fourefold.

Firſt, the inſtrumentall cauſes of Chriſts death, I find likewiſe to be fourefold.

{ 1 The envy of Satan. 2 The malice of the Iewes. 3 The covetouſneſſe of Iudas. 4 The deſire of the people. } For

1 The envy of Satan.

Iohn 13.27.

Iob 1.

Luke 22.53.

Foure ſpeciall things inraged Satan againſt Chriſt.

Firſt, the goodnes of the man.

Firſt, Satan, whom he had often vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſſed of mens ſoules and bodies, was moſt obſtinate in malice againſt him, and thinking now to have fit opportunity, having as it were leave to do what he would or could do unto him, he entreth into the heart of Iudas, (ſaith the Evangeliſt) and ſo, no doubt, he did into the hearts of many of the reſt, and together with them, he complotted all theſe moſt exquiſite torments of purpoſe to be revenged on him, and to ſee if by this meanes he could bring him, as he ſaith of Iob, to curſe God and die, that ſo he might have him as a prey, which otherwiſe he feared would deſtroy him: And this our Saviour intimateth, ſaying, I was daily with you in the Temple, and ye ſtretched forth no hands againſt me, but now this is your houre and the power of darkneſſe, that is, now is Satan let looſe, now he hath leave to rage, and now I am ſet as a But for him to ſhoot all his ſhafts at me: And we find foure ſpeciall reaſons that might move Satan the more infinitely to rage againſt him: As Firſt, the goodneſſe of the man; for the better any man is, the more cruelly is Satan ever bent againſt him, and while we continue wicked, The things that he poſſeſſeth are in peace; but the more godly we be, the more we ſhall be perſecuted of him: and therefore Chriſt being without ſinne, he would do his beſt to heape upon him all ſorrowes.

Secondly,

Secondly, The manifold checks and rebukes that he had formerly ſuffered at the hands of Chriſt; for ſo the Evangeliſts tell us, that Chriſt had often rebuked the uncleane ſpirits, and commanded them to hold their peace; and therefore he envied him and hated him, and would now be revenged on him, ſuch is the nature of the wicked when they are reproved.

Secondly, the rebukes he had received from Chriſt.

Thirdly, the victories of Chriſt.

Thirdly, the many victories that Chriſt had formerly over Satan, as in the wilderneſſe, in a ſingle combate, and when he diſpoſſeſſed him out of thoſe miſerable creatures whom he tormented.

Fourthly, the loſſe of his ſervants.

Fourthly, the loſſe of thoſe his ſlaves, which Chriſt had already freed from his ſubjection, and of all thoſe he feared Chriſt would free, if he ſhould not now ſubdue him: Hæc ſecum: And therefore conſidering all theſe things, and knowing that ſomtimes Victis redit in præcordia virtus, the conquered have happened to become conquerours, he reſolveth with himſelfe, like a deſperate man, either to kill, or to be killed; and in that reſolution he commeth forth, having great rage againſt our Saviour Chriſt; and therefore (as the proverbe is) He muſt needs go whom the divell drives; ſo he muſt needs ſuffer, which like Iob hath Satan for his tormentor, eſpecially being as he was, ſo inraged againſt our Saviour Chriſt; and having now leave to impoſe upon him the moſt exquiſite torments that he could deviſe.

Nec dum ceuſe iratum ſevio, dolores excidérent animo.

Una ſalus victis nullam ſperare ſalutem.

Secondly, Iudæi, quem conſtituto tempore & loco venturum ſignificaverat olim non unus vates, eum veniſſe jam & adeſſe præſentem non intellexerunt; the Iewes knew him not being preſent, whom they long expected when he was abſent, and though many of the Prophets had fore-told them, both the time when, and the place where he ſhould come and ſhew himſelfe unto them, yet, when he came, and they ſaw him, they deſpiſed him, and maligned him, and even hated him unto the death: And, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Aſtiterunt reges terræ, the Kings of the earth ſtood up, and the Princes tooke counſell together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt; So we find that the Scribes, and the Phariſees, and the Herodians hunted after him, as for a Partridge upon the Mountaines; they watched all his wayes, and ſought to intrap him in all his words, and to take him, that they might condemne him.

2 The malice of the Iewes againſt Chriſt.

Pet. Cunæus de republ. Hebr. l. 1. c. 18. p. 107.

Pſal. 2.

Thirdly, Iudas for very griefe, that he had loſt the price of that oyntment, wherewith the Woman annointed Chriſt, and which he had valued at three hundred pence, went out as I ſhewed you before, and ſold Chriſt for thirty pence, and then betrayed him into the hands of ſinners.

3 The covetouſneſſe of Iudas, Mar. 14 5.

Fourthly, Chriſt being treacherouſly betrayed, violently apprehended, and moſt falſly accuſed by the Sonnes of Belial, the High Priests, for very malice that they bore againſt Chriſt, and for feare that the Romans, if they let him eſcape, would come and take away that rule & authority which was left them, thought him worthy to die, and delivered him unto Pilate, and did teach the ignorant, ingratefull, and unconſtant multitude, moſt earneſtly to deſire the death of Chriſt, ſaying, Crucifie him, crucifie him; and therefore Pilate for feare of the Prieſts, and to pleaſe the people, when he had ſcourged Chriſt, condemned him, and delivered him to be crucified. And yet all theſe were but inſtrumentall cauſes of theſe manifold ſufferings of Chriſt, there were other more efficient and far greater cauſes than all theſe; for 4 The deſire of the people.

Secondly, the efficient cauſe of Chriſt his death was God himſelf; for ſo the Prophet Eſay ſaith, It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, and to put him to griefe; to bruiſe his body with tortures, through the malice of the Iewes towards him, and to ſtrike his ſoul with grief through the mercy of God towards us: and ſo the Prophet Ieremie, ſpeaking of theſe ſufferings in the perſon of Chriſt himſelfe, ſaith, that they were ſorrowes and ſufferings, Quæ fecit mihi Deus, whereby God hath afflicted me; God who is termed a devouring fire, and an over-flowing torrent of wrath, doth now make our Saviour Chriſt, as the only But to ſhoot at him all the ſhafts of his fury; he openeth him and powreth into him all the vials of his indignation; and as Iob complaineth, That the terrours of the Lord did ſet themſelves in array againſt him, ſo Chriſt, when he ſaith περίλυπος ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου, My ſoule is encompaſſed

2 The efficient cauſe of Chriſt his death. Eſa. 53. 10.

Lam. 1. 12. That God himſelf laid all this puniſhment upon Chriſt.

Mat. 14 34

with ſorrowes on every ſide, ſheweth how God had ſet himſelfe againſt him; yea, though God afflicteth ſometimes in mercy, even as a Father when he correcteth his deareſt child; yet is he here ſaid to have done this, In the fiercenes of his wrath: And therefore how could Chriſt chooſe but ſuffer? for when God will ſmite, who is able either by ſtrength or wit to eſcape out of his hands?

Why God afflicted Chriſt.

1 Pet.2.22.

Mat.3.17.

Queſt. But here it may well be demanded, what moved Gods wrath to be thus kindled againſt Chriſt? For God hateth nothing but ſinne; and in Chriſt there was no ſinne, neither was any guile found in his mouth: And therefore ſeeing God never doth as Annas did, to cauſe Chriſt to be ſmitten, without a cauſe; why ſhould God be ſo much diſpleaſed, as thus grievouſly to puniſh his onely Sonne, in whom he was alwaies well pleaſed, and with whom he was never in any wayes offended?

God afflicted Chriſt for us, and not for himſelfe. Dan.9.27.

Reſp. To this we muſt anſwer, with the Prophet Daniel, that the Meſſias muſt be ſlaine, but not for himſelfe; for he tooke upon him the perſon of us all; and if a man that oweth nothing, becomes a ſurety for a debtor, if the principall becomes bankerupt, the ſurety ſhall be compelled to make a plenary ſatisfaction, and he muſt pay that which he never tooke: And therefore Chriſt undertaking the paiment of our debts, and to diſcharge us from Gods wrath to come, He tooke upon him our infirmities, he was wounded for our iniquities, and broken for our tranſgreſſions.

Eſa.53.4.5.6.

Luk.22.64.

And ſo if the tormentors ſhould ſay, as once they did, Propheſie unto us who it is that ſmote thee; we may quickly become Prophets, and moſt truly anſwer for him, that our ſinnes ſmote him, our iniquities whipt him, our pride crowned him with a crowne of thornes, our drunkenneſſe gave him that vinegar to drink, and in a word, our ſinne, our grievous ſinne, what ſinne ſoever it be, did thus hainouſly murder Chriſt, and faſt nailed him unto the Croſſe; Quia ſolum peccatum homicida eſt, for alas it was not Pilate, nor Caiaphas, nor any one of that complicie of confederate Agents, that were the efficient cauſe of his death; for they were but the inſtruments and executioners onely of that puniſhment which our ſinnes, the ſinnes of each man had laid upon him; and the Executioner cannot be ſaid properly to be the cauſe of that mans death, which by the Law is adjudged to die; but to ſay the truth, our ſinnes have killed the Sonne of God: And therefore as Nathan ſaid unto David, Thou art the man that did the deed; ſo I may ſay to every ſinner, Thou art the man, for whoſe ſins God in the fierceneſſe of his wrath, did thus puniſh and afflict his only Sonne.

Our ſinnes crucified Chriſt.

2 Sam.12.7.

Ionat 1.12.

O that this would make every one of us to cry out with Ionas, Propter me hac tempeſtas, I am the cauſe of all theſe troubles, of all theſe ſtormy winds and tempeſt; Take me and caſt me into the Sea; and as David, when he ſaw the miſerable death of the people for his ſinne, was vexed at the heart, and cried unto the Lord, ſaying, Behold, I have ſinned, and I have done wickedly, but theſe ſheepe, what have they done? So I wiſh that every one of us would ſee it, and ſay, it is I O Lord that have ſinned, but for this innocent Lambe, this harmeleſſe Dove, alas, what hath he done? And I hope this would make us to hate and deteſt our ſinnes, when we conſider that they were the only murderers of the Sonne of God.

2 Sam.24.17.

You ſee then, that as in the Law it was ordained, that a man ſhould bring his Beaſt to the doore of the Tabernacle, and ſhould put his hand upon the head of it, when he offered the ſame for a burnt offering unto God, to ſhew unto us, that the man himſelfe had indeed deſerved to die, and that the Beaſt was onely ſlaine for his offences; So here our Saviour Chriſt was put to death, not for any cauſe of his owne, but (as Saint Peter ſaith) The juſt ſuffered for the unjuſt; becauſe he was wounded for our ſinnes, and crucified for our tranſgreſſions, as the Prophet ſpeaketh.

Levit.1.4.

1 Pet.3.18.

Eſay 53.4.5.

Queſt. But then againe it may be demanded, why ſhould he undertake our debt, and make ſatisfaction for our ſinnes, when as we had no wayes deſerved any kindneſſe at his hands, and could by no meanes requite ſo great a benefit.

What moved Chriſt to undertake our debts.

Reſp.

Reſp. I anſwer, That it was requiſite and neceſſary, that hee ſhould ſuffer for our ſins, to fulfill the truth of God; becauſe he had promiſed that the ſeede of the woman ſhould breake the Serpents head, and that the Meſſias ſhould ſuffer for our ſins, and be broken for our tranſgreſſions: And the Father promiſed this for none other cauſe but this, Becauſe he loved us; For God ſeeing us in ſuch a miſerable ſtate, as we had made our ſelves by ſin, was moved with compaſſion over us, and was contented to give his onely begotten Sonne to be crucified for us, rather then we ſhould be eternally ſeparated from him: So our Saviour ſaith, God ſo loved the World, that is, So admirably, ſo exceedingly, and ſo incomprehenſibly, That hee gave his onely begotten Sonne, that is, to die for us, That whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life: And ſo S. Paul ſaith, God ſetteth out his love towards us, ſeeing that while we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us: And ſurely it was a farre greater argument of his love, to give his Sonne to die for us, then if he had forgiven our ſins, and acquitted us without any ſatisfaction at all; And therefore S. Paul ſpeaking of this love of God calles it, Too much love, as the vulgar Latine reades it; Deus propter nimiam charitatem, God through his great, or too much love, wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us with Ieſus Chriſt: And this great love of God will appeare the greater, if we conſider, that this Son of God, which he gave to die for us, was not only his onely begotten Sonne, which was very great, that having but one onely Sonne, he would give that one to die for us, but was alſo ſuch a Sonne, in whom onely God was well pleaſed, and with whom he was never offended, as I ſhewed unto you before.

Gen. 3. 15. Dan. 9. 26. Eſay 53. 5.

The love of God to mankinde, moved God to doe all this for us.

Iohn 3. 16.

Ephes. 2. 4.

And as the Father ſhewed Tantam charitatem, ſo great love, in giving his Son to die for us; ſo the Sonne ſhewed the like equall love, in being ſo willing as hee was to ſuffer for us; for in the beginning, or in the volume of the Booke it is written of me, (ſaith Chriſt) that I ſhould fulfill thy will O God, and I am content to doe it, That is, I am as willing and as ready to fulfill it, as thou art to conceive it; yea, I am grieved or I am pained, till I have fulfilled it; For it is meate & drink to me (ſaith Chriſt) to doe my Fathers will: And therefore once againe, behold the great love wherewith Chriſt hath loved us; Surely (ſaith S. Bernard) Dilexiſti me magis quam teipſum, quia pro me mori voluiſti; Thou haſt loved me more then thou didſt thy ſelfe, becauſe thou gaveſt thy ſelfe to die for me; For greater love then this hath no man, that a man ſhould give his life for his friends, eſpecially for his enemies, as he did for us, Cum inimici eſſemus, While we were yet ſinners, and regarded neither him, nor our ſelves: And therefore S. Bernard doth moſt truly ſay, that hee did this, Tanto dignantius quanto pro minus dignis; So much the more wonderfully worthy of love, by how much the leſſe worthy we were of his love.

Omnis in Aſcanio Chariſtat cura parentis.

Mat. 3. 17.

Heb. 10. 7.

Iohn 15. 13. Rom. 5. 8.

Bern. de Cana Domini, Ser. 13.

And in very deede, there is no man breathing, that is able to expreſſe how great was the love of Chriſt towards mankinde; But my conſcience is my witneſſe, (O my Saviour) what I have done to thee, and thy Croſſe doth witneſſe what thou haſt done for me; for thou waſt God and I a man, and yet thou a God wouldeſt bee made man for mee, yea, to become exiled, poore, and baſe for us, that were the vileſt Creatures, moſt poore, and baſe miſerable ſinners; And not onely ſo, but alſo to die a moſt cruell, bitter, and a ſhamefull death, to deliver us from eternall death: O what couldeſt thou have done more for us, that thou haſt not done? The like example cannot bee found in any Hiſtory; for one will ſcarce die for a righteous man; It may be they will ride and runne to ſave a good mans life; but to die for another, we ſhall ſcarce finde any that will venter it: It is true, that the Curiatij and the Horatij are reported, to have adventured their lives, for the liberty of their Countrey; And ſo Decius, Curtius, and Codrus did freely offer themſelves to death, for to preſerve their peoples life; but they did this either for ambition to be honoured for their facts, and to be numbred among the Gods, or elſe in deſperation of their lives, to be ridde out of their griefe, when they ſaw none other helpe of their miſeries; but Chriſt when there was no neceſſity to compell him, did all this, and farre much more, then I have ſhewed, for us; And that not onely, Sine noſtris meritis, ſed cum noſtris demeritis;

No Creature able to expreſſe the great love of Chriſt to mankinde.

Rom. 5. 7.

Titus Liv. Decad. 1. l. 2. Val. Max. l. 5. c. 6.

demeritis; When wee deſerved no good, but eſpecially when wee were worthy of ſo much evill at his hands, as was due to moſt deadly enemies, as Saint Bernard ſaith.

Bern. Ser. 15. in Cant.

CHAP. III.

Of the finall cauſes why Chriſt ſuffered, both in reſpect of Men, and in reſpect of God himſelfe.

AND ſo you have ſeene the inſtrumentall cauſes of Chriſt his death; and you heard the efficient cauſe, why God puniſhed Chriſt; for us, and for our ſins; and why for us; becauſe he loved us with a great, exceeding, incomprehenſible love; And how this ſhould teach us, that as our hearts doe hate Judas and Pilate, and all the reſt of our Saviours bloudie perſecutors, which were but the Inſtruments of his death; ſo much more ſhould wee loath and deteſt our owne ſinnes and wickedneſſe, which were the maine principall cauſe, that moved God thus ſeverely to puniſh him: And now it reſteth, that wee conſider the finall cauſe thereof; and I finde that to be twofold.

The finall cauſe of Chriſt his death.

1. In reſpect of Men.
2. In regard of God.

1 In reſpect of Men twofold.

First, In reſpect of Men, I finde it likewiſe to be twofold.

1. The ſaving of all the Elect.
2. To make the reprobate without excuſe.

1 Of the Elect. Mat. 20. 28.

For the firſt, Our Saviour ſaith, That he came to give his life a ranſome for many, and to ſave thoſe that were loſt; And ſo Saint Paul ſaith, That Chriſt was made under the Law, to redeeme them that were under the Law; and that Ieſus Chriſt was ſent into the World to ſave ſinners: Now we muſt know, that as Bellarmine noteth, there are divers kindes of redemption; as

Gal. 4. 4.
1 Tim. 1. 15.

That there were divers kindes of redemption.

First, By Manumiſſion, as when the Lord did willingly of his owne accord let his ſlaves goe free.

Secondly, By permutation, as when any one priſoner was exchanged for another.

Thirdly, By force, as when by their friends they were reſcued out of the hands of their enemies.

Fourthly, By a ranſome, as when a price, thought counter-vaileable to the priſoners, was paide for the deliverance of the Captives: And thus Chriſt redeemed us; for we had ſold our ſelves (or rather given away our ſelves; becauſe we do it for ſuch trifles, for nothing, that it deſerves not the name of a ſale,) under ſin; and we had paſt away our ſelves unto Satan, and he would never ſuffer us freely to be freed out of his hands; neither was there any force nor friends that could any waies reſtore us unto our former dignity; and therefore Chriſt came to repurchaſe us, that is, to buy us backe againe unto God; And though we ſell our ſelves for nothing, yet Satan like a cunning Merchant, that knowes well the worth of Soules, would not part with us at any reaſonable rate; and therefore Chriſt was faine to pay for us, not gold, or ſilver, or any ſuch like corruptible thing, but his owne deare and pretious bloud; So dearely was he faine to pay for us, ſo dearely it coſt him to redeeme our ſoules.

Chriſt paid our ranſome.

1 Pet. 1. 18.

How deerely it coſt Chriſt to redeeme us.

That the bloud of Chriſt was the price to ſave all men, as well before his comming, as now after his comming

And ſo Chriſt came and offered himſelfe, upon the Altar of the Croſſe, as a ſufficient ſacrifice to pacifie his Fathers wrath, and to ſatisfie his juſtice to ſave our ſoules, yea, the ſoules of all them that beleeved in him from the beginning of the World to this preſent day, and ſo forward to the finall period of all fleſh; For, It was not the bloud of Goates, or Calves, that was the true propitiatory Sacrifice for the ſinnes of the Fathers, that lived under the Law; but it was the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt, that was onely figured and ſignified by theſe Levitticall ſhadowes, by the

the Paschall Lambe, by the Brazen Serpent, and by whatsoever else that was given them as a Schoolemaster to bring them unto Christ, which purged their consciences from dead workes, to serve the living God; For he is said to be the Lambe slaine, that is, slaine in the figure, slaine in the purpose of God, and slaine in the vertue of his Passion, to every one that beleeveth him to be slaine for him, from the beginning of the World: And therefore, all those that went before, and all those that came after, cried, Hosanna to the Sonne of David; For as the looking to the Brazen Serpent, was the onely meanes to save all those people from death, which were bitten by the fiery Serpents, whether they were before it, or behind it, or on either side of it, neere it, or farre from it; so the beleeving in the death of the Sonne of God, was, and is the onely meanes to preserve all men from the sting of sinne, as well those that went before him, as those that doe come after him: And therefore, Quod est grande ludibrium impijs, est grande mysterium pijs; The death and passion of Iesus Christ, which is foolishnesse unto the World, is the sole comfort and consolation of all Christians, as Saint Augustine doth most sweetly comment upon those words of the Apostle, God forbid that I should rejoyce in any thing, save in the Crosse of Iesus Christ, Gal.6.

Gal.4.

Revel.13.8.

Mat.21.9.

Numb.21.9.

Et unde mundi Pharisæus erubuit, ibi Apostolus thesaurum reperit, & quod ibi visum est stultitia, Apostolo factum est sapientia.

Quest. But here it may be demanded, how the sufferings of Christ being but of short continuance, should be of that worth and dignity, as to be a sufficient price for our eternall deliverance, and to make a plenary satisfaction for the sinnes of the whole World.

That the merit of Christs suffering, depends upon the worthinesse of the person.

Resp. To this I answer, that the merit of his suffering, depends not upon the quantity of paine, or the continuance of time, but upon the worthinesse of the sufferer; and that in two respects:

First, Of his Innocency; for he was holy, harmelesse, and undefiled; a Lambe without spot, in whose mouth was found no guile: And therefore, Iustum est, saith Saint Augustine, It is a most just and a righteous thing, that the debtors should bee set free, because hee, which owed nothing, did pay all our debt.

Heb.7.26. 1 Pet.1.19.& 2.22

Aug.Lib.c.14. de Trinitate.

Secondly, Of his Excellency; for he was not onely a most innocent man, Quem nullum maculavit delictum; But he was also a most omnipotent God, as the Apostle sheweth, when he biddeth us, To take heede unto the Flocke, which God hath purchased with his own bloud: And therefore, as the Father is infinite, which was provoked, so the Sonne is infinite, which made the satisfaction, that for an infinite offence, there might be an infinite attonement; and so the person dying, being both God and Man, his death must be of a greater value, then the deaths of all the men of ten thousand Worlds: And therefore Saint Cyprian truely affirmeth, Modicam guttam sanguinis Christi propter unionem hypostaticam pro redemptione totius mundi sufficisse; That the least droppe of the bloud of Christ, by reason of the union of the Deity unto the Man-hood, to make but one person of Christ, is of full sufficient value, to make satisfaction for the sins of the whole World.

Maxim. qui. dragged Sect. 2.

Acts 20.28.

The transcendent excellencie of Christ.

That the sole sufferings of Christ, is fully sufficient to satisfie for all sins.

And this doth sufficiently confute all those that joyne the afflictions of the Saints, with the sufferings of Christ, as a part, or the accomplishment of the price of their redemption, as if with Christ alone there were not, as the Prophet saith, plenteous redemption; for though the Apostle saith, I rejoyce in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behinde of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake which is the Church; yet this is not to be understood of the propitiatory sacrifice for sinne; for so Christ onely suffered all that was to bee suffered for our sinnes, as both the Prophet Esay, Chap. 53.4,5,6. and the holy Apostles of our Saviour Christ, Saint Paul, and Saint John, do most fully and sufficiently declare, saying; He, that is, He διὰ ἑαυτοῦ by himselfe, hath purged our sinnes; and as David onely entred the lists against Goliah, when all the Israelites were but meere spectators; So did Christ alone undertake the combate against Satan, and hath trodden the Wine-presse alone, as the Prophet speaketh: and therefore Christ said, All is finished, that is, not onely all that is written of me is now fulfilled, or all the ceremonies of the Law are now ended, but especially all that is to be suffered for Psal 130.7. Words of the Apostle how understood. Colos.1.24.

Esay 53.4.5.6. Heb.9.26. 1 Iohn 2.2.

Heb 1.3.

Esay 63.3.

Ille solus sordes omnium potest ablutere.

Aug. hom. 108. de tempore.

Aquinas par. 3. sum. q. 48. art. penult.

How the sufferings of the Saints doe profit the Church.

Acts 9.4.

Rom. 5.3.

Acts 5.41.

Sues in vit. Aug. Cæsar.

The Senates Judgement of Augustus.

The sufferings of Christ comforteth and confirmeth all Christians.

Heb. 12.24.

Rom. 8.32.

Iames 1.5.

2 Of the Reprobates. How the death of Christ maketh the wicked without excuse.

for the sinnes of men is now fully accomplished; But the sufferings of the Saints doe profit the Church, not by way of satisfaction for their sinnes, but by way of example and consolation, to strengthen them in their faith, and to confirme them (saith the Glosse) In gratia Dei, & in doctrina Evangelij, In the grace of God, and in the doctrine of the Gospell; and they are called the rest of the afflictions of Christ, not because the sufferings of Christ were imperfect, or not sufficient to satisfie for all sinnes, but because of that simpathy and fellow-feeling that Christ hath of all the sufferings of his Saints, in which respect hee saith unto Saint Paul unconverted, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? because hee accounteth all evill or good done unto them, to be as done unto himselfe; and therefore though we should rejoyce in our afflictions, because he doth account us worthy to suffer for the name of Christ, yet seeing the suffering of all the miseries that can befall a man, cannot make us worthy of this glory of Heaven, as Origen saith, we should wholly relie upon the all-sufficient merits of Christ his sufferings, for the salvation of our soules; because all sacrifices ended in this selfe-sufficient sacrifice, which was not onely the abolishment of all other oblations whatsoever, but was also the most perfect and most absolute holocaust, yea and the one onely hylasticall and propitiatory sacrifice that was to bee offered for the sinnes of the whole World.

Suetonius tells us, that when Augustus Cæsar either out of Humility or Policie, desired that the Senate would adjoyne two Consuls with him for the government of the State, the Senate answered, that they held it a diminution of his dignity, and a disparagement of their owne judgement, to joyne any one with so worthy a man, as Augustus was: and surely it would much more derogate from the worth of our Saviours sufferings, and shew us to be meere fooles, if with the invaluable sufferings and sacrifice of Christ, to satisfie the wrath of God, wee would joyne the momentarie afflictions of any man.

And as this Doctrine of his suffering for the satisfaction of all sinnes doth confute all them, that joyne the afflictions of the Saints with the sufferings of Christ, for the making up of the price of our redemption; so it doth sufficiently confirme and comfort all those that doe most faithfully put their trust in Christ; For though our sinnes be very great, and though we have sate in darkenesse, and in the shadow of death; yet seeing Christ hath suffered for us, both what God in Iustice could require, and what our sinnes could justly deserve, we should not despaire, we should not feare; because the blood of Christ, as the Apostle noteth, speaketh better things then the blood of Abel; that, crying for vengeance, this, for pardon unto his brethren.

And as it serveth to confirme us against despaire, so it may be applyed to assure us of whatsoever we need; for so the Apostle reasoneth, hee that spared not his owne Sonne, but gave him for us all to death, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? he that loved us so deare, as to give us his onely Sonne, what will he thinke too deare for us? and therefore if we want any thing let us aske of God, and he giveth and will give unto all men liberally whatsoever he seeth fit and convenient for them.

Secondly, As our Saviour dyed thus, to satisfie the wrath of God for the sinnes of all men, and to bring his Saints unto everlasting glory; so he did it to make the wicked without excuse; because they tread under feet the Sonne of God, and account the blood of the covenant, as an unholy thing, and will not lay hold and beleeve in Iesus Christ.

But if any man should demand, whether Christ suffered and dyed for all men without exception, or for those elected Saints onely, which hee had chosen unto salvation; or whether he dyed sufficiently for all, and effectually onely for his elect, (which in my minde is but a poore distinction; because it is most certaine, that his death and suffering, if it had pleased God to give them that grace to apprehend it, and by actively faith to apply it unto their soules, is of sufficient value to ransome the sinnes both of all men and all divels also) and many other such like questions questions about the the generality and efficacy of Christs death, I referre him to my Treatise of the The Delights of the Saints, where I have handled this point more at large. And so you see, why Christ suffered in respect of men.

See the Delights of the Saints part. 1

Secondly, He suffered all this in respect of God, for the praise and glory of his owne blessed Name; for as God hath made and created all things, so he hath redeemed all men, for his owne sake; that his wisedome, his power, and his goodnesse might be knowne unto men, and so he might be praised and magnified of men for evermore: And therefore this should teach us to doe what lyeth in us to glorifie the Name of God for all these great things, that Christ hath done and hath suffered for us.

2 In respect of God.

CHAP. IV.

Of the usefull appplication of this Doctrine of the sufferings of Christ: and what we ought principally to learne from the consideration thereof.

The consideration of Christs sufferings should worke in us foure speciall effects.

AND as generally this suffering of Christ, out of his meere love to man, should move us all to praise the Lord, and to serve him; so more especially, it should worke in us, these foure speciall things:

1. To move us to compassion when we consider his sufferings.
2. To make us thankefull for so great a benefit.
3. To cause us to love him as much as possibly we can.
4. To worke in us a readinesse to suffer any thing with him and for his sake, that died and suffered all this for us.

First, to move us to compassion. Iob 10. Vers. 11. & 9.

For the first, the Prophet David, musing of Gods great love towards mankinde, saith, O Lord, what is man that thou art so mindefull of him? And to this holy Iob answereth; saying, Thou hast made me as the Clay, and thou wilt bring me into the dust, and I shall be consumed as a rotten thing, and as a garment that is moth-eaten; And yet to save this poore, contemptible thing, Christ tooke upon him our nature in the wombe, and undertooke our death upon the Crosse, yea, and whatsoever he suffered as man, he suffered for man; and therefore, how can we behold his head resting upon a pillow of thornes, his hands pierced with iron nayles, and his heart bleeding for our sinnes, and not to be moved to a godly sorrow for those our horrible sinnes, that caused all his sorrowes? It is reported in the Gospell, that when our Saviour suffered, the Sun withdrew his light, as being ashamed to see so wofull a spectacle, the earth quaked and trembled, as it were for feare to see her Creator put to death, and the stones did cleave in sunder; yea, wicked Judas that betrayed and sold our Saviour, when he saw the indignities that were offered unto him, did repent, and grieve, that he had betrayed that innocent bloud: and therefore what strange hearts have we, worse then Judas, and harder then stones, if we can behold the torments of his Passion, and not be touched with compassion? The naturalist telleth us that the Adamant stone is of an impenetrable hardnesse, and yet he saith, that if it be steeped in the warme bloud of a Goate, it will be mollified: and therefore if the bloud of Christ, which is farre more excellent then the bloud of Buls, or of Goates, cannot intenerate our hard hearts, we are worse then the Adamants, and no better then the divels, That Christ should bleed for us, and we not weepe for our owne sins.

Omnis creatura compatitur Christo morienti, sol obscuratur, &c. Solus miser homo non compatitur, pro quo solo Deus patitur. Huron in Mat.

Quality of the Adamant.

Plinius l. 37. c. 4.

Secondly, To make us thankefull.

For the second, Our Saviour having suffered all this for sinne, to save sinnefull men, and to eternize mortall men, He hath broken the head of the Serpent, he hath wounded the great Leviathan, and by the merit of his Passion, he hath subdued Hell, conquered the grave, rebated the sting of death, taken away the force and guilt of sin, and removed those Cherubims, and that flaming sword, which was placed to affright us, and to keepe the way of the tree of life, and he hath blotted out the

Gen. 3. 2.

the hand-writing of ordinances that was againſt us, and laid open unto us the gates of eternall life; and therefore now we ſhould all ſay with the Pſalmiſt, What ſhall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits that he hath doth done unto us? for we muſt not thinke it inough to weepe in commiſeration of Chriſt his paines, but we muſt be alſo thankefull for Chriſt his ſufferings.

Pſal.116.12.

To praiſe God is the ſweeteſt thing in the world.

The whole world knoweth what great love he hath ſhewed to us, and what bitter Paſſion he hath ſuffered for us; and therefore væ tacentibus de te, Domine; Woe be unto them, whoſe ingratitude hath ſilenced them from praiſing thee; Sed felix lingua, quæ non novit niſi de te Sermonẽ texere; but moſt happy is that tongue which can praiſe thee, O Lord, though it ſhould be able to ſpeake of nothing elſe; becauſe not onely nothing can be carried better in our mindes, nothing can be ſweeter in our mouthes, nothing more melodious to our eares, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, then Deo gratias, to aſcribe all praiſe, and to render all thankes unto the Lord our God, but eſpecially, becauſe (as Saint Bernard ſaith) no ſacrifice can bee more acceptable unto God, for who ſo offereth me thankes and praiſe, he honoureth me, and nothing can be more offenſive unto Satan, then to praiſe the Lord; for though thou watcheſt, he careth not; becauſe he himſelfe never ſleepeth; though thou faſteſt, he regards it not; becauſe himſelfe never eateth any thing; but if thou beeſt thankefull unto God for his great love to thee, then is Satan grieved; becauſe thou, being a ſilly worme on earth, doſt performe that here in the valley of miſery, which he being a glorious Angell in Heaven, could not performe in that ſeat of Majeſty; and therefore, as the Prophet David ſaith, that he would riſe at midnight to praiſe the Lord for his righteous judgements; ſo with the Prophet David I wiſh to God, that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, eſpecially for this great goodneſſe, and declare the wonders that he hath done, and eſpecially this ſuffering this great ſuffering, that he underwent for the children of men, and that they would praiſe him from the ground of the heart.

Nothing more odious to Satan then to praiſe God.

Pſal 107.15.

That we ſhould ſhew our thankefullneſſe to Chriſt by our workes. Luke 2. Mat.2.

And becauſe, virtus niſi cum re vilior alga, thankfullneſſe conſiſteth more in workes then in words, therefore let us not onely with the Angels ſing, Glory bee to God on high, but let us with the Wiſe men, preſent our gifts unto him, gold, to clothe the naked, and to feede the hungry ſoule, Frankinſence, to maintaine the preaching of Gods Word, and Myrrhe, to be prepared for our death, that wee may live for ever with him: Macrobius tels us that a certaine ſouldier of Auguſtus Band, that had often adventured his life in Cæſars cauſe, being to appeare before thoſe Iudges, whom he feared, deſired Auguſtus for to aſſiſt him; and the Emperour preſently wiſhed him, to chooſe whom he would, and he would appoint him for his advocate; but the Souldier replied, O Cæſar, I appointed no Deputy, when your life was in danger to be loſt; but I hazarded mine owne life, and received all theſe ſcarres (which he then ſhewed in his body) to preſerve you from all hurt, and doe you now appoint a Deputy and conſtitute another to pleade for me? what, have I done ſo much for you, and will you refuſe to doe ſo ſmall a kindneſſe for me? even ſo beloved brethren, Chriſt did not onely hazard his life, but gave himſelfe to death, and ſuffered ſcarres and wounds, and the ſhedding of all his bloud, of his deareſt bloud for us; and ſhall wee doe nothing for him? O yes, beloved, let us ever doe what lyeth in us for the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt; for whatſoever you doe to any one of them, you doe it unto me, ſaith our Saviour Chriſt.

Macrob. Saturnal. l.2.c.4.

The Souldiers pleading with Auguſtus.

Mat.25.40.

For the third, as Chriſt hath ſo dearely loved us, as to ſuffer all theſe things for us, ſo we ſhould truely love Chriſt againe; and we ſhould the rather love him not onely becauſe he hath done all theſe things for us, but alſo becauſe he requireth nothing for all theſe things but love; for he exacts no tribute, he requires no homage, he expects no requitall but love; O then let us not ſay with the uncleane ſpirits in the Goſpell, What have we to doe with thee, O Ieſus thou Sonne of God? but let us rather ſay with the Church in the Canticles, Stay me with flagons, and comfort me with apples, for I am ſicke of love; and as thy love to me Erat talis & tantus ut neſciret habere modum, was ſuch and ſo great, that it could not containe

Thirdly, to teach us how dearely and how truely we ought to love our Saviour Chriſt.

Marke 1.24.

Cantic.2.5.

Bern. in Serm. de paſſ. dom.

it

ieſelſe within the compaſſe of any bounds, ſo my love to thee ſhall be ſuch and ſo much, as I ſhall be poſſibly able to expreſſe.

Fourthly, to make us willing to ſuffer with Chriſt.

For the fourth, S. Bernard tels us, that in the Paſſion of Chriſt, there are three things eſpecially to be conſidered.

1 The worke.
2 The manner.
3 The cauſe.

Three things to be conſidered in the paſſion of Chriſt.

And he ſaith, that Chriſt ſhewed
First, in the worke, ſingular patience.
Secondly, in the manner, admirable humility.
Thirdly, in the cauſe, ineſtimable charity.

And therefore if we would truly honour God for the giving of his Sonne, we muſt labour what we can to imitate Chriſt herein.

1 Patience.

First, in patience, Quia crux non ad impotentiæ documentum, ſed ad exemplum patientiæ ſuſcepta eſt; Becauſe (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) the Croſſe of Chriſt is as a Schoolemaſter to teach patience unto all Chriſtians: And ſo S. Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps: In the firſt of the Macchabees and the ſixt it is ſaid, that Antiochus being to fight with Iudas, Captaine of the hoſt of the Iewes, He ſhewed unto his Elephants the blood of Grapes and Mulberries, to provoke them the better unto the fight; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt hath ſet downe unto us what injuries, what contumelies, what torments our Saviour Chriſt did beare, and how patiently he did beare them, to incourage us to indure whatſoever calamities ſhall betide us, during this our pilgrimage here on earth; for we ſee our Saviour Chriſt ſine peccato venit, & tamen ſine flagello non exijt; though we do all know that he came into the world without ſinne, yet you do all ſee he went not out of the world without ſorrow, without ſuffering; and therefore, Quæ nobis erit contumelia, poſtquam hæc Chriſtus paſſus eſt? What if we ſuffer reproaches, poverty, ſhame, death? What matter, what ſhame is that to us, ſeeing Chriſt hath ſuffered all thoſe things for us? nay, what a ſhame is it unto us, if we will not be ready to ſuffer any thing for his Names ſake, that hath ſuffered ſo much for our ſinnes?

That the ſufferings of Chriſt is an example to teach us how to ſuffer. 1 Mac. 6. 34.

Chryſ in 27 Mat.

But we muſt note that our ſuffering with Chriſt is two wayes to be conſidered.

We ſuffer with Chriſt two manner of wayes.

First, what we do voluntarily aſſume, to be made like unto Chriſt.

Secondly, what is maliciouſly impoſed, and we patiently ſuffer for the Name of Chriſt.

1 Way.

In the firſt ſenſe, S. Gregory tels us, that duobus modis crux tollitur, aut cum per abſtinentiam affligitur corpus, aut per compaſſionem animi affligitur animus; we take up our croſſe two manner of wayes, either when through abſtinence, faſtings, watchings, praying, we bring our bodies unto ſubjection, that they bring not our ſoules unto deſtruction; or elſe through a compaſſionate fellow-feeling of others miſeries, we make our ſelves co-partners with them in all diſtreſſes: and therefore we ſhould ever crucifie and mortifie all the inordinate luſts of our fleſh, all our wanton and laſcivious cogitations; and we ſhould with all diligence fight againſt them, as they do fight againſt our ſoules, and as members of the ſame body, we ſhould all ſuffer inward griefe, when we ſee any man indure outward paine.

1 Cor 9 27.

That as members of the ſame body we ſhould willingly ſuffer when we ſee others ſuffer.

In the ſecond ſenſe, we ought patiently to ſuffer, whatſoever God in his wiſdome, or men in their malice ſhall lay upon us, and that not only becauſe we cannot avoid them, but becauſe we are contented to undergo them; for if the mind reſiſteth when the body ſuffereth, we rebell in what we can, and we do only ſuffer what we cannot helpe; and God reſpecteth not ſo much the ſufferings of the Martyrs, though their torments were almoſt intolerable, as their meeke patience in ſuffering: and therefore it is noted in our Saviour Chriſt, that he was carried as a ſheepe to the ſlaughter, and as a Lambe that was dumbe, and opened not his mouth; to teach us (as S. Gregory ſaith) that it is not the ſword, or the flame that makes a Martyr, but the patient and willing mind of him that ſuffereth any thing, for the

2 Way.

Eſay 53 7.

That God reſpecteth our patience in ſuffering, more than our ſuffering.

Cyprian de duplici Martyrio.

name and truth of Christ; Quia sine ferro & flamma Martyres esse possumus, sine patientia non possumus; Because we may be Martyrs without the paine of sword or stake, but we cannot be Martyrs without patience, though wee should suffer by the sword, or be burned at the stake, as S. Cyprian doth most excellently declare: And therefore, seeing Christ hath suffered for us, and hath suffered for our example, to teach us how we should suffer for his sake, though the world should rage and swell, and lay upon us all the waight of miseries that it could heap upon us, poverty, reproaches, banishment, imprisonment, death it selfe, or any kind of death, fire, sword, or whatsoever; yet let us patiently suffer whatsoever shall be imposed upon us, and let us say with holy Iob, Though the Lord should kill us, yet will we trust in him; for seeing he suffered so much for us, to save our soules from eternall death, it were a shame, if we should be unwilling to suffer any thing for him and his truths sake, that it might be well with us, and our children for ever, and that we might have for our selves eternall life.

That we should be most ready and willing to suffer any thing for the name of Christ.

Iob 13.15.

Secondly, as we are to imitate Christ in patient suffering unto death, so we are to learne of him true humility, to be meek and lowly in heart, throughout all our life.

2 Humility. Mat. 11.29.

Thirdly, we should imbrace that Queene of vertues, divine charity, that as Christ in love, and for the love of man descended from heaven, and suffered all this for us; so we should, for the love of him, suffer any thing, rather than to swerve a nailes-breadth from him, and do what good we can unto all our neighbours; for if we love him, we must needs love one another; and yet it is a lamentable thing to consider what strifes and contentions, what hatred and heart-burning raigneth, not only betwixt the children of this world, but also betwixt Christians in the Church of God: I pray God we seek not our owne, rather than the things that are Iesus Christs, and make Religion to be a colour to make way for us to execute our owne greedy minds and desires, to commit all wrong and oppression: It was said of old, when the Pope sent his Buls to fulfill his owne will, that in nomine Dei incipit omne malum; I onely pray it may never be so with any Christian soule, that we make not the truth of God, (with all reverence be it spoken) as a Packe-horse to support our vile desires: I am sure, if there were more love and charity among Christians, lesse faults, lesse errours would appeare to be in the Church of God, than now there seems to be; for charity suffereth all things, believeth all things, and is ever willing to make faults and errours lesser than they be; whereas the want of love will make the worst of every thing, every errour to be an heresie, and every infirmity to be hainous impiety; nay, want of love will make sinnes where God made none, and make vertues to be vices, whereas perfect charity will never hate the man, though he be full of iniquity.

3 Charity. That as Christ loved us, so we should love him, and love one another for the love of Christ.

How the want of love is the cause of many mischiefs in the world.

1 Cor. 13.

We ought to love all men, and to hate all vices, in whomsoever they be.

And therefore my conclusion of this point is, that as Christ hath loved us, and gave himselfe for us, so let us love Christ, and love one another for Christ his sake; and he that doth these things shall never fall.

The

The fourth part.

Chap.

Of the manner of Christs sufferings, how he suffered all that I have shewed, so as the Prophets fore-told, and as the Apostles had seene the same with their eyes.

Fourthly, having heard of the person suffering, Christ, of the chiefest things that he suffered, which are recorded by the Evangelists, and of the necessity of that suffering in respect of those causes, which did necessitate the same, we are now to consider the manner how he suffered, expressed in the word πάσχω, so to suffer, that is, so humbly, so lovingly, so meekly, so patiently, and so every way in respect of himself, as that neither the tongues of men nor angels were never able by any like to expresse it, or by any words to declare it, nor any apprehensions or thoughts of man able to conceive it; And so, in regard of men, as the Prophets had fore-told, and the Apostles had already seene; for so it pleased almighty God before the comming of the Messias, to fore-tell

The incomprehensible manner of Christ his sufferings.

That all predictions touching the Messias, were all accomplished in Iesus Christ.

Two things fore-told.

1 The very time of his comming.
2 The very particulars that should happen to him.

1 The time of Christ his comming.

1 The Prophet Daniel, whose singular piety is commended by Ezechiel, being taught by the Angell, that could not deceive him, hath left it recorded in the ninth Chapter of his Prophesie, that from the going forth of the commandement to restore and to build Ierusalem, that is, after the returne of the Iewes out of their captivity of Babylon, unto the Messiah the Prince that shall come, that is, to redeeme all the world from their sinnes, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks, and the street shall be built againe, and the wall, even in troublous times; and after threescore and two weekes shall the Messiah be cut off, but not for himselfe, and so forth; according to which time, interpreted after the Scripture phrase and Propheticall manner for a week of yeares, it is apparent that the Messiah was to come to suffer before the space of 500 yeares should be expired after the promulgation of the decree of Cyrus and Darius Kings of Persia, touching the restauration of the City of Ierusalem; and according to this account, there was one Nehumias a great Rabbin and Doctor, that lived about foure hundred and fifty yeares after the time of this vision of Daniel, and about fifty yeares before the comming of Christ, and he said plainly, that the time of the Messias fore-told by Daniel, could not be protracted above the space of fifty yeares then next ensuing; and at the end of this time, Christ Iesus came, according to the Propheſie, that he might suffer for the sinnes of his people: and therefore how obstinately blind are the Iewes, to see above two thousand yeares passe since the time of Daniel, and yet not to find him whom they do expect, because they rejected him whom they should receive.

The testimony of Nehumias a great Iewish Rabbi.

And as the Prophet Daniel expressed the time of his comming by these weekes, and then the destruction of Ierusalem within such a time after his passion, which Iosephus referreth just to that time; so the Prophet Haggai setteth downe the very time of his comming, when he incourageth Zerobabel the sonne of Shealtiel Governour of Iuda, and Ioshua the sonne of Iosedech the high Priest, to go on merrily with the work that they had in hand, and for their comfort, telleth them,

An inanswerable proofe out of Haggai, for the time of Christ his comming.

Latter temple farre meaner than the former.

that the glory of this latter houſe, which they were now erecting, ſhould be farre greater than the glory of the former, which Salomon builded; for certainly this can neither be meant of the greatneſſe of the worke, nor of the matter of the building, nor of the fabricke and artificiall ſtructure thereof, nor of any other outward beauty of that temple, which was in all reſpects inferiour to the glory of the Temple of Salomon, as both the hiſtory of thoſe times, recorded in the holy Scriptures, which tell us, how the old men that came from Babylon, and had ſeene the former Temple, and now ſaw this, did weepe and lament at the meanneſſe of the ſame, in compariſon of the other that was deſtroyed, and likewiſe Ioſephus, that was a man moſt expert in all Iewiſh antiquities, do make it plaine; but the Prophet meaneth, that the glory of the latter Temple ſhould exceed the former, in reſpect of his covenant and promiſe to eſtabliſh his peace, and to ſhew mercy and loving kindneſſe unto them through that Meſsias, which ſhould come to this ſecond Temple, which was therefore more glorified, in reſpect of him, that was farre greater than Salomon; and this the Prophet Malachy, that lived when the latter Temple was built, doth moſt plainly expreſſe, when he ſaith, Behold I will ſend my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before me, and the Lord whom ye ſeeke ſhall ſuddenly come to his Temple, even the meſſenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; And therefore the Meſsias was neceſſarily to come, during the time and ſtation of this ſecond Temple; and that was according to the confeſſion of the Iewes themſelves, the ſpace between Zorobabel, that erected it, and Titus Veſpaſian that demoliſhed it; becauſe Herod the Great, that beſtowed great coſt upon this Temple, and made it exceeding glorious, as Ioſephus witneſſeth, did not re-edifie it, out of its old ruine, but did by little and little repaire it, and ſo did renew the old, but made no new one; and for this cauſe it was a generall received opinion among all the Iewes both learned and unlearned, and among all their neighbouring proſelites, that the Meſsias was undoubtedly for to come juſt about that time wherein our Saviour lived; and therefore ſome of them tooke Iudas Gaulonites, others Herod, and others other Apoſtata's and Hiſtrio's to be their Meſſias; and ever ſince, their Doctors and Rabbins, perceiving themſelves unable to anſwer theſe arguments, of the comming and ſuffering of the Meſsias, doe goe about to ſhift off their ſinne, and excuſe their unbeliefe, by confeſſing indeed that his comming was to be about that time; but the ſinnes of the people cauſed him, either not to come at the promiſed time, or if he did come, yet hitherto, to hide himſelfe in the ſeas or the inacceſſible wilderneſſe, and not to manifeſt himſelfe unto his people

Adde quod Hebræorum magiſtri annotant duas maximas dotes defuiſſe templo poſteriori, quæ priori adfuerant, id eſt, 1 Conſpicuam quandam lucem divinæ maieſtatis indicem. 2 Divinum afflatum. Grotius de veritate Chriſt. Relig. p. 263.

Mal. 3.

The Meſsias was to come while the ſecond temple ſtood.

What Herod did to the temple.

Rabbi Samuel in aureo tractatu de miſerrimo ſtatu Iudæorum.

The fictions of the Rabbins.

But to this I will briefly anſwer, that the reaſon why the Meſsias ſhould come, was both to adminiſter medicine to the wicked world, and to procure pardon for their offences, and, as the Angell ſaid of Chriſt, to ſave his people from their ſinnes, and as he ſaith himſelfe, to ſeeke the loſt ſheepe of the houſe of Iſrael, and alſo to preſcribe them good and wholſome rules for the reformation of their lives and manners; for ſo the Prophet Zachary fore-told it plainly, that there ſhould be a fountaine opened to the houſe of David, that is, in the daves of the Meſsias, and to the inhabitants of Ieruſalem, for ſinne and for uncleanneſſe; that is, for the waſhing away thereof; and the Hebrew Rabbins themſelves do confeſſe, that the Meſsias ſhould be called Iſh Copher, that is, a reconciler or peace-maker betwixt God and man; and therefore it is againſt all reaſon, that any one would deferre and deny to do that thing, or to cure that diſeaſe, for which he is preciſely deſtinated, and himſelfe doth moſt earneſtly deſire to diſcharge it.

Why Chriſt came.

What the Meſsias ſhould be.

2 The Prophets fore-told almoſt every thing that ſhould happen throughout all the whole life of the Meſsias, even from the firſt moment of his conception, unto the very laſt act of his aſcenſion, that ſo all men might believe in him, in whom they ſaw all thoſe predictions fulfilled, and none other; for the Prophet Eſay had ſaid, that a Virgin ſhould conceive and beare a Sonne; Micheas ſaid, that he ſhould be borne in Bethlehem-Iuda; Hoſeas fore-told of his flight into Egypt; and to be briefe, the place of his dwelling, In the borders of Nepthali;

2 The particulars that ſhould happen to the Meſsias

Eſay 9.1.2
Mica. 5.2.
Hoſ. 11.1.
Eſay 9.1.
Cap. 53. 4.

the

the manner of his living, Healing all manner of infirmities, and preaching the glad tidings of ſalvation, and almoſt every one of the leaſt particulars that ſhould happen unto him at his death; as how he ſhould be ſold and betrayed by his owne diſciple, how all his followers ſhould flie from him, how craftily and maliciouſly he ſhould be apprehended, how falſly he ſhould be accuſed, how baſely he ſhould be handled, buffeted, whipped, and ſpitted upon, how unjuſtly he ſhould be condemned, and how cruelly he ſhould be faſtned unto the Croſſe, to die an accurſed death, and as moſt accurſed, betwixt the wicked, and how he ſhould be generally mocked, his garments taken from him, and have gall to eat, and vinegar to drinke, and what not? All was fore-ſhewed that ſhould happen unto the Meſſias: and therefore it behoved Chriſt ſo to ſuffer, becauſe it was propheſied that he ſhould ſo ſuffer.

Zach. 2. 9.

Pſal. 41. 2. Eſay 53. 10.

And as the Prophets did fore-ſhew how the Meſſias ſhould ſuffer, ſo the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles teſtifie how Chriſt did ſuffer all and every one of thoſe things that were written of him; for they were eye-witneſſes of the ſame; and ſo they teſtifie unto us, That which was from the beginning, which we have heard and ſeene, and our hands have handled of the Word of life, that teſtifie we unto you; that is, that all the things which were written of him, which was promiſed from the beginning, we have ſeen them fully accompliſhed and fulfilled in him which lived and converſed amongſt us, and which we preach unto you, Ieſus Chriſt: Saint Matthew recollects thirty two ſeverall Propheſies that he ſaw fulfilled in our Saviour Chriſt; Saint Iohn adds many other, and ſo do the reſt diverſe more; ſo that whoſoever would, with the men of Berea, ſearch the Scriptures, from the firſt Booke of Moſes, unto the laſt Prophet Malachy, and mark out all the things that were ſpoken of the Meſſias, that was for to come, we ſhall, if we do but look, find them all recorded in the writings of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, to be moſt fully fulfilled in the perſon of Ieſus Chriſt.

The Evangeliſts and Apoſtles prove the fulfilling of the propheſies of the Prophets. 1 Iohn 1. 1.

S. Matthew recorded the fulfilling of 32 Propheſies.

A ſufficient condemnation to all Iewes, that ſtill look for another Chriſt; for why ſhould not they believe their owne Prophets? They ſaid the Meſſias ſhould ſuffer theſe things; Chriſt ſuffered them ſo, as they were propheſied; who then can be the Meſſias, but he, in whom all theſe Propheſies were fulfilled? But S. Paul tels us why they will not believe in him; becauſe partly blindneſſe is come upon them, untill the fulneſſe of the Gentiles be come in; And now Lord, if it be thy will, open their eyes, that they may ſee this truth, and circumciſe all infidelity from their hearts, that they may believe thy Sonne Ieſus Chriſt to be the Saviour of the world.

Why the Iewes believe not in Chriſt. Rom. 11.

And as this condemneth all unbelieving Iewes, ſo it confirmeth all true Chriſtians in the faith of Chriſt: And I wiſh to God, that as the ſeeing of all theſe things fulfilled in Chriſt, makes us all to believe in him; ſo the ſuffering of all theſe things for us, would make us all to praiſe this our Lord Ieſus Chriſt for his goodneſſe, to feare him in all our wayes, to love him with all our hearts, and to ſerve him truly and faithfully all the dayes of our life. The Poet writes of love, ſaying,

Properties of love

Fax grata, gratum eſt vulnus, mihi grata catena,
Me quibus aſtringit, laedit & urit amor.
Sed flammam extingui, ſanari vulnera, ſolvi
Vincla, etiam ut poſſem, non ego poſſe velim.
Mirum equidem genus hoc morbi eſt, incendia & ictus,
Vinclaq́, vinctus adhuc, laeſus & uſtus amo.

Gratefull to me the fire, the wound, the chaine,
By which love burnes, doth bind, and giveth paine;
But for to quench this fire, theſe bonds to looſe,
This wound to heale, I would not, could I chuſe.
Strange ſickneſſe, where the bonds, the wound, the fire,
That burnes, that binds, that hurts, I muſt deſire.

And if this be true of I know not what love, O then how much should we desire to live in this love of Christ, that doth ravish and inebriate our soules with unspeakable and inconceiveable sweetnesse?

And therefore O blessed God, grant this unto us, for Iesus Christ his sake, to whom with thee, O Father, and the holy Spirit, three distinct Persons of that one individed essence, be ascribed all praise and glory, both now and for evermore. Amen.

O Most blessed God, that hast given thy dearest and thine onely Sonne, not onely to be made man, subject to all infirmities, but also to suffer all miseries, throughout his whole life, and in the end to be put unto a most shamefull, painefull and accursed death, by wicked men, for sinfull men, that he suffering what we deserved, we might be delivered from thy wrath; we most humbly beseech thee in his Name, and for his sake, to forgive us all our sinnes, to accept his death as a plenary satisfaction, to acquit us from everlasting death, and to give us thy grace, that for this, and all other thy loving favours unto us, we may be truly thankefull, and most dutifully obedient to please thee, and to praise thy blessed Name, for ever and ever, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

This Treatise sheweth,

1. The malice of the Iewes.

2. The devotiō of the women, whereis shewed,

1. Their number, Three: and why?

2. Their names,
1. Mary Magdalen.
2. Mary Iacobi.
3. Mary Salome. whereby is shewed,
1. The fortitude.
2. The fruitfullnesse.
3. The peaceablenesse of the Church.

3. The actiō, where is considered,
1. The matter, a seeking of Christ.
2. The manner, which was a seeking him,
1. Early.
2. Earnestly.
3. Mournefully.
4. Onely.
5. Continually.
3. The end, to embalme him.

4. A question resolved, how these women, or one of them at least being so wicked, became so devout; handled at large.

3. The office of the Angell

1. In respect of Christ to doe him service.

2. In respect of the keepers to terrifie them.

3. In respect of the women;

1. To comfort them,

1. By the manner of their apparition,
1. In white.
2. On the right side,

2. By their friendly allocution, teaching,
1. Whom we ought to feare.
2. Whom we ought not to feare.
3. How we ought to feare.

1. The resurrection it selfe, shewed,
1. Negatively that Christ was not in the grave.
2. Affirmatively that he was risen and gone away, and therefore not there: where that point of the corporall presence of Christ is handled at large.
3. Illustratively two waies. *

* 1. A Priori from the predictions, that Christ should rise, where is shewed,

1 Why hee was to rise againe
1. Respect of Satan.
2. Respect of Man.
3. Respect of Himselfe.

2. Why to rise the third day, respect
1. Of his Enemies.
2. Of his Disciples.
3. Of all Christians,*

* To confirme their faith touching,
1. The quality of his Person.
2. The certainty of his Resurrection.
3. The manner of our restauration.
4. The declaration of our state and condition.

- 2. To instruct them,
  - 1. What they should beleeve touching the resurrection of Christ: where is hãdled,
    - 2. A Posteriori, from the subsequents of his resurrection, and here is shewed,
      - 1. The Iewes reasons why they will not beleeve.
      - 2. Our reasons why wee doe beleeve him to have risen: as
        - 1. The angelicall assertion.
        - 2. His manifold apparitions.
        - 3. Many circumstantiall demonstrations.
    - 2. The place from whence he rose is discussed, where the discention of Christ to hell is shewed, by the
      - 1. Necessity requiring it.
      - 2. Scriptures proving it.
      - 3. The consent of all antiquity, confirming it.
    - 3. The manner how Christ rose, in respect of the
      - 1. The place, from the dead.
      - 2. The time, early.
      - 3. The Person which was
        - 1. Truely.
        - 2. Perfectly.
        - 3. Gloriously.
    - 4. The application of the whole doctrine, where is shewed that the resurrection worketh,
      - 1. Our resurrection from sin, which must bee as his was;
        - 1. Speedily.
        - 2. Truely.
        - 3. Totally.
        - 4. Constantly.
      - 2. Our assurance of resurrection to eternall life.
  - 2. What they should doe, where is shewed how necessary it is to joyne practise unto the profession of Christianity.

The

The fifth

Golden Candlesticke,

HOLDING

The fifth greatest Light of Christian

RELIGION.

Of the Resurrection of CHRIST.

MAT. 28. 4,5,6.

And for feare of him, the Keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

And the Angell answered, and said unto the Women, feare not you, for I know that you seeke Iesus, which was crucified.

He is not here, for he is risen as hee said, come, see the place where the Lord lay.

OVr blessed Lord God, and loving Father, out of his excellent providence, and secret love to Man, hath so tempered all the accidents and whole course of mans life, with such proportion and equall counterpoyse of occurrents, that ever and anon joyes and sorrowes are mixt together, as wee may easily see in our blessed Saviour; for upon Mount Thabor he was transfigured in glory, that his face did shine as the Sunne, and upon Mount Calvery, hee was disfigured in sorrow, that confusion went over his face, and that in him there was neither forme nor beauty; and upon Mount Olivet, even now, an Angell comforting him, and by and by an agony affrighting him; so upon the Crosse, even now he cries as destitute of all helpe, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? yet by and by after, as assured of comfort, he saith, O my Father, into

The coherence of this Treatise with the former.

Mat. 17. 2.

Esay 53. 2.
Luke 22. 43.
Verse 44.

Mat.27.46. Luke 23.46. into thy hands I commend my spirit: Even so it is with us all,

Nocte pluit tota, redeunt spectacula manè; Heavinesse may indure for a night, but joy commeth in the morning; To day we may be sicke at the point to die, to morrow we may be restored to life againe; to night in prison and in distresse, to morrow at liberty and advanced to dignity: And this we see plaine in my Text; for the last day was a day of cloudes and darkenesse, a day of griefe and sorrow for the passion and suffering of the Sonne of God; But behold, this day is a day of joy and gladnesse, a day of Iubile, for the most glorious resurrection of this Omnipotent Sonne of God; for as it behoved him to suffer for our sinnes, (as you heard) Rom.4.25. so it behoved him to rise againe for our justification, saith the Apostle: And so this Angell testifieth that he did; for He is not here, but is risen, as he said; Come see the place where the Lord lay. And

The division of the Text. In these words we may observe,

1. The persons here mentioned.
2. The action of each person plainely expressed.

1 The persons. First, The Persons mentioned, are especially of three sorts.

1. Keepers.
2. Women.
3. Angels.

2 The actions. Secondly, The actions expressed, are

1. Of the Keepers watching Christ.
2. Of the Women seeking Christ.
3. Of the Angel,
   1. Terrifying the former.
   2. Comforting the latter.

Three things to be observed. And from all this, we may see these three things.

1. The malice of the Iewes.
2. The devotion of the Women.
3. The Office of the Angels,

And the maine summe of all is, The Resurrection of Christ.

The first part.

Of the malice of the Iewes against our Saviour Christ.

1 Of the malice of the Iewes.

FIrst, The malice of the Iewes against our Saviour Christ, is seene, in that they did not onely spitefully oppose themselves against him, throughout all his life, and most unjustly deliver him to a most shamefull death, but also maliciously watched him in his grave, that he might not rise, (to shew the right property of the wicked, not onely to throw the righteous downe, but also to keepe them downe, and to trample them still under feete) and to hire the Watchmen to belie both themselves and his Disciples, that the truth of his Resurrection might not be knowne and beleeved for our salvation.

O miseri, quæ tanta insania cives! O wretched men that you are; what, is your rage as strong as death? nay, stronger then death? and longer then death? For the man is dead, and he is buried; And yet, Vos excandescitis ira, Your rage is implacable; you set armed Souldiers to watch and ward over this dead, harmelesse man: And so we finde what the Scripture saith of the wicked, to be true in you, Malitia eorum excæcavit eos; Your malice and your wickednesse have blinded your eyes: Nay, but this deceiver said (say some of them) That after three daies I will rise againe. Wisd. 2. 21.

How wicked men are deceived.

A deceiver indeed; Sed pius seductor, But of them onely that deceive themselves, either

1 Way. First, By relying too much on his mercy, and not thinking of his justice; or

2 Way. Secondly, By fearing too much his justice, and forgetting all his mercy; or

3 Way. Thirdly, By not beleeving his power, either to save the penitent beleevers in him, or to punish the wicked contemners of him; for of all these and the like, the Prophet saith; The Lord will deceive you, (that is, suffer you to deceive your selves) He will make his Arrowes drunken in blood, and he will cause his Sword to goe through your sides: But them that truly trust in him, he will never deceive, nor suffer them to be deceived in him; For our Fathers hoped in him, and were not confounded. Deut. 32. 42. Psal. 22. 4.

But what if you had seene him rise againe? what would you have done? would you have beleeved in him? no surely; for you know he rose, his Disciples testifie it to your faces, and your owne Souldiers say it; and are faine to hyre them to say the contrary: What then would you have done? would you have crucified againe the Lord of life? Yes, no doubt; such is the malice of the wicked, that the death of the godly, decies repetita placebit, is never often enough inflicted: O therefore good Lord, thou King of Heaven, Give me any head, save the head of a Serpent; and any malice, save the malice of an enemy; * For death it selfe cannot hide me from these, but they will rage and rayle on my very Ghost. And so much for the malice of the Iewes. Eccles. 25. 23. * And any enemy save a woman to be mine enemy; for so the originall word doth signifie.

The

2 Part.

The second part.

CHAP. I.

Of the number, and the names of these Women, that came to seeke our Saviour Christ in his Sepulcher.

The devotion of the women. Iohn 20. 1.

SEcondly, The devotion of the Women is here commended, in that they are said to come early, while it was yet dark, to seeke Iesus for to imbalme him; And for the better vnderstanding of this point, these three especiall things must be considered.

Three things observable.

1. Their number.
2. Their names.
3. Their action.

1 The number of the women. Why three Women went togeather unto the Sepulcher.

First, Saint Matthew here seemes to say, they were two; Mary Magdalen, and the other Mary; but S. Marke saith plainely, that they were three; and that (as we may gather) for three speciall reasons,

1 Reason.

First, For decency; because it was not so fit to see a Woman gadding all alone; for it is neither customable nor commendable for Matrons, like Dina, to walke single.

2 Reason.

Secondly, For mutuall society; Quia væ soli, For woe to him that is alone, especially at so unwonted a season as the night, so dismall a place, as the grave, and in so heavie a case as death.

3 Reason.

Thirdly, For the better confirmation of the truth; for that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word shall be established: And therefore there went three of them. And

2 Their names. Haymo in postil. in die resur.

Secondly, They were all three called by the same name, Mary; Et uno nomine censentur quia una voluntas, And they had but one name;

What it signifieth, that all the three Women were called by the same name.

First, Because they had but one will, they had the same desire, they all desired and all sought but onely Iesus Christ, that was crucified; And Secondly, Because they all signified the same thing, that is, the Church of God in generall, or every Christian soule in particular.

1 Reason.

For the first, the Scripture saith, Væ duplici corde, Woe to him that goeth two manner of waies, that hath two tongues, two hearts, two affections, one to seeke for God, and another to seeke the World; because such, in seeking both, doe leese both; for the World they cannot keepe, though they seeke never so much after it; and God, for seeking the World, they shall never finde: And therefore these three Women had but one heart, one will, one desire; they did all seeke for Iesus that was crucified.

Woe to the double hearted.

2 Reason.

What Mary signifieth.

For the second, they all signifie the same thing; for Maria in the Syriach Tongue signifieth Dominam, a Lady or Mistresse; and Marah in Hebrew signifies bitternesse; So is the Church of Christ, and so is every Christian soule, a Mistresse of her affections, and bitter for her afflictions.

1 How the Church is to rule her children.

First, The Church ruleth over her Children, and the Soule over her desires; she makes all her affections yeeld obedience unto reason, and reason it selfe to faith; for where humane reason faileth, there divine faith attaineth to the height of many mysteries.

Secondly,

Secondly, the Church is like that ship that was tossed to and fro with the mighty waves, and the billowes of the raging seas, never at rest, untill it arriveth at the haven of eternall happinesse: The story of the Church doth make this plaine; because, as the distich saith,

Sanguine fundata est Ecclesia, sanguine crevit,
Sanguine succrevit, sanguine finis erit.

It began in bloud, it continued in bloud, and shall never be free from bloud unto the end.

Mat. 8. 24. 2 How the Church was ever subject unto afflictions.

And so is every Christian soule full of sorrowes, full of bitternesse; we may see our selves as in a glasse, if we look into the state of these three silly soules seeking after Christ; for they are bereaved of him, whom their soules loved: And therefore, as the Spouse saith in the Canticles, In my bed I sought him whom my soule loved, I sought him, but I found him not; so these Women seeke him whom their soules loved, and not in their beds, but in the Garden, in the grave; for they range, and rage, and run up and down like as it were a Lion, or a Beare robbed of her whelpes, and yet they find him not; they see the nest, But the Eagle is flowne away, and the watchmen can tell no tidings of him: and therefore they stand appalled, all woe-begone with griefe, their hearts are all sobby and swolne, like the lower vallies, that drink up the drops of heaven, and for want of teares to expresse their griefes, (having emptied their bottles afore by continuall crying) each one of them doth now lamentingly say, Quis dabit capiti meo aquam? Who will powre water into the cisterne of our heads, that we may powre out our plaints like a Nightingale robbed of her brood, and mourne like a Turtle for the losse of our dearest Lord? for he being taken from us, our life is loathsome to us; Sit mihi posse mori; It were well for us, if we could die; for as our names be Marah, bitter, so he hath filled us with bitternesse, and made our soules drunken with wormwood; this is the state of these Women; and this is the state of every Christian soule, teares must be her meat day and night, whiles they say unto her, where is now thy God? for how shall we sing the Lords song in a strange land, and whiles we are as strangers from the Lord? And so you see, why all three were called by one and the same name. And yet we find that they were all distinguished; For

Cant. 3. 1.

The sorrowfull state of the women.

Lam. 3. 15.

Psal. 137. 4.

The first was Mary Magdalen.
The second was Mary the mother of Iames. } And not without a mystery.
The third was Mary Salome.

How the three Maries were distinguished and knowne the one from the other, which teacheth two things.

For this sheweth either three speciall properties both in the Church and in every member of the Church, or els the different gifts and faculties which God bestoweth upon his servants, to every one as pleaseth him. For

1 The properties of the Church.

First, Mary Magdalen was so called, à Castello Magdalo, from a Tower, which was lofty and strong; Mary Iacobi was the Sister of the blessed Virgin and the Mother of Iames, an Apostle and follower of Iesus Christ; and Mary Salome was so called, either of her Husband, or of a Village named Salome, which signifieth peaceable: And therefore by these three Women, these three Maries, are signified three speciall properties of Gods Church and of every member of the Church.

3 Speciall things signified by the three women.

That is, { 1 Fortitude. 2 Fecundity. 3 Peace. } For

So is the Church, so were these Women, and so is every Christian soule. For 1 Fortitude. Cant. 4. 4.

First, Salomon saith of the fortitude of the Church, Sicut turris David collum tuum, thy neck is as the tower of David, that is, as high as heaven, and so strong, as that the gates of hell can never prevaile against it: And in these women here, we find a peerlesse patterne of Christian fortitude; for though they were the weaker sex, yet I find them stronger in affection than Men; for the Apostles ran and out-ran these Women, yet was their devotion sooner spent, and themselves sooner out of breath; for they stayed not; but these Women, as they had formerly come unto the grave, so now they stand longer at the grave than the Apostles did; for so

Mat. 16. 18.

How seareless the women were in seeking Christ.

it is ſaid of Mary Magdalen, quòd ſtetit, that ſhe ſtood ſtill, and ſtood to it; and ſo no doubt they did all, not like Peter, who fearefully following afarre off, and warming his hands in the High Prieſts Hall, benummed his heart for want of faith; nor yet like Ioſeph of Arimathea, who ſecretly, for feare of the Iewes, begged of Pilate the body of Ieſus; but, like the ſtouteſt Heroicks, ſteeled with a manly reſolution, they feare not death it ſelfe; And as the Poet ſaith of that valiant Scava,

Iohn 20.11,12.

Mat.26.58.

Quem non mille modi mortis, &c.

Luc.in.l.6.

So theſe feareleſſe Women feared not a thouſand ſorts of death; ſo ſhould every Chriſtian ſoule be unwearied to ſeek, and undaunted to profeſſe our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt; for whoſoever will be aſhamed of him here on earth, he will be aſhamed of him before his Father which is in heaven.

Mar.8.38.

Secondly, for the fecundity of the Church, ſhe is like Sara that bringeth forth more fruit in her age, than ſhe could do in her youth; her ſeed is as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be numbred: So theſe women, they run and tell his friends and diſciples, that Chriſt is riſen from the dead; and ſo by this meanes they do what lieth in them, to increaſe the number of Gods children; and ſo ſhould every man do, when he is confirmed, to ſtrengthen his brethren; for it is our duty to incite all others to believe in Chriſt, and to declare Chriſt unto them, That they alſo may have fellowſhip with us, in the fellowſhip which we have with the Father, and with his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt.

2 Fecundity. How theſe women labour ſo increaſe the number of true believers.

1 Iohn 1.3.

Thirdly, for the peaceableneſſe of the Church, the Scripture ſaith, that it is a viſion of peace, the daughter of peace, and the mother of peace: ſo theſe Women, they came peaceably, not armed like the ſouldiers, but harmleſly like Noahs Dove, with nothing in their hands but ſweet flowers, nothing in their mouthes but ſweet words, good Sir, If thou haſt taken him away, then tell us where thou haſt laid him, and as the Church ſaith, Vbi paſcis, ubi cubat in meridie, that we may know where he is, where he lieth: ſo ſhould every Chriſtian man lay aſide all bitternes, all malicioufnes, and put on the garment of meekneſſe and gentleneſſe; for ſeeing God is a God of peace, and the Church a viſion of peace, a city at unity within it ſelfe, that man can never be the ſonne of God, which is not the child of peace. And ſo you ſee, that as theſe Women, ſo every man or woman that ſeeketh Chriſt, muſt be valiant fruitfull, and peaceable. And yet

3 Peace. How peaceably the women came to ſeek for Chriſt.

Iohn 20.15.

Every Son of God muſt be the child of peace.

Secondly, as theſe Women, though they had each one of them all theſe graces in a good meaſure, yet each one of them had not theſe, or the like graces in the like meaſure; for as Mary Magdalen was leſſe fearefull, ſo Mary Iacobi was more fruitfull than the reſt: ſo God diſtributeth his gifts and graces even as pleaſeth him, to one he giveth the gift of prophecying, to another the gift of healing; to S. Iohn the gift to ſpeak of his Divinity againſt Ebion; to S. Marke the gift of handling his humanity againſt Marcion; to S. Peter the gift to work mightily in the converſion of the Iewes; to S. Paul in the converſion of the Gentiles; to ſome he gives the gift to be famous Orators, excellent in perſwaſions, like Apollo; to others to be judicious expoſitors of more poſitive inſtructions, as beneficiall unto the Church, though perhaps more prejudiciall unto themſelves; to ſome he gives the gift like Mari Iacobi, to be fruitfull in number, to preach often, and to bring forth many Sermons; to others like Mary Salome, to be more peacefull, yet no leſſe faithfull than the reſt, to do it ſeldome, yet to do as well as their fellowes.

3 The diverſity of the gifts of the Church.

How God beſtoweth his gifts diverſly unto men

Luther and Zuchius had excellent matter, but meane words.

excellent words, but no matter; Phil. Melanction and likewiſe M. Calvin had both excellent words and excellent matter; but had neither words nor matter

And ſo in all the reſt of Gods graces, he gives not the ſame gifts to all perſons; for Lactantius was good to confute the Gentiles, but he was not ſo good to confirm the Chriſtians; Origen was famous in the myſticall interpretation, but not ſo judicious in the literall expoſition of the Scriptures; S. Auguſtine moſt excellent to diſcuſſe controverſies, to confound hereticks, and moſt judicious to interpret all poſitive points; but he was not ſo melliſluous in his exhortations; ſo among the practitioners of religion, ſome are faithfull to ſuffer, ſome are painefull to work, ſome zealous to pray, ſome are deſirous to heare, ſome, like Mary Salome, bleſſed peacemakers, others like Mary Iacobi, painfull inlargers of Gods Church, & others like

Mary

Mary Magdalen, faithfull ſufferers for Gods truth; all good, but not all the ſame gifts; for as among Davids Worthies, all reached not to the firſt three, ſo among the Worthies of Chriſt, all have not the ſame meaſure of grace.

And this ſhould teach us, every man to be contented with thoſe gifts, and with that meaſure of grace that God hath given him; and every man to labour according to the grace he hath received in his owne element, whereto he is moſt inclined, and not in other mens ſtraine, whereto perhaps he is more affected; for the fruits of affectation, can never be ſo ſweet unto the palate of another, as are the fruits of our ſpeciall and naturall inclination. And this ſhould teach us all, to affect one grace, as not to reject the other, ſo to magnifie one man, indued with ſuch gifts, as not to vilifie another, inabled with ſome other gifts; for this were to receive the faith of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, with reſpect of perſons; and it is not in man to have what gift he pleaſeth, but it is God that diſtributeth and diſpoſeth of his graces, even as it pleaſeth him.

That every man ſhould be contented with the gifts that God doth give him.

Iames 2.1.

Chap. II.

Of the action of theſe women, which was a right ſeeking of our Saviour Chriſt.

THirdly, the action of theſe women is here expreſſed, according to thoſe three eſſentiall properties of every good and godly action.

viz { 1 The matter juſt. 2 The manner lawfull. 3 The end pious. } For

3 Of the action of the women Three properties required to make every action good

First, the matter and ſubſtance of their work, is ſaid by the Angell to be an inquiſition, a ſeeking, ye ſeeke, ſaith he: and ſo we do all ſeek; for ſince Adam, like a griping uſurer, who extorting more than his due, loſeth principall and all, deſiring to be as God, loſt both God and himſelfe, the whole world is at a quære, and in a continuall ſeeking; but moſt of us do ſeek amiſſe; For

1 The matter juſt. All men are ever ſeeking for ſomething.

1 Some ſeek for wealth, Quærenda pecunia primum; and they preferre that before the health of their ſoules: And therefore ſurely they may well feare, becauſe they carie two heavy burdens upon their backs; the one is deliciarum putredo, the ruſt of their covetous deſires, and the other is curarum magnitudo, the greatneſſe of worldly cares, Quorum unumquodq; ad ſubigendum naviginm ſufficit, whereof each one is able to ſinke a ſhip, the ruſt of our riches to be a witneſſe againſt us, and the cares of this world to choake us and drowne us in perdition.

1 Some ſeek for wealth.

Wealth how dangerous.

2 Some ſeek for vaine-glory, which is an intolerable drunkenneſſe of the mind, as S. Chryſoſtome ſaith; And I feare that many of our ſelves in ſeeking Chriſt, do ſeek for this; and we ſeek for it after the baſeſt manner; for as the old Monkes were proud of humility, ſo many of us would be accounted moſt learned, by ſhewing no learning at all: And therefore I think, that the Prophecy of Eſay is now fulfilled, Like people, like Prieſts; for in the Primitive Church, the Prieſts were better than the People; and in the times of Popery, the People were better than the Prieſts; Ideo non potuit dici, uti eſt populus ita eſt ſacerdos, therefore it could not be ſaid, as is the People, ſo is the Prieſt; becauſe the people were not halfe ſo bad as the Prieſts; but now they are all alike; the People for fancy will heare but whom they like, and believe but what they liſt, and the Prieſt for advantage will ſpeake but what may pleaſe: O good Lord deliver me from the number of theſe men, and into their councell let not my ſoule come. And

2 Some ſeek for vaine glory.

Our ſtate now.

Gen. 49.

3 Some others ſeek for pleaſure, where the beſt Ale is, where the ſtrongeſt Wine is, and where the faireſt woman dwels; ſo ſome ſeek for honour, ſome for pride, ſome for revenge, ſome for one thing, and ſome for another thing; Et nemo Chriſtum quærit, and ſo ſeeking their owne, they ſeeke not that which is the Lord Ieſus: And therefore theſe ſeekers may all feare, leaſt finding theſe things, they loſe themſelves.

3 Many other ſeekers.

The godly do only seek for God.

The forme of the heart.

Aug. in Confess.

John 14. 6.

Many seek for God, but not aright, as they that seek him in the bread, in the pixe, and in the secret corners where he is not.

But these women seeke for a better thing, they seeke for God; and so doth every man: for though we found all other things that we seek for, yet all things cannot content us, untill we find our God: for the heart of man being as a triangle, and the whole world being round, and a round thing cannot possibly fill a triangle, but that the corners thereof will still be empty; therefore it is impossible that any thing should satisfie and content the heart of man, but only the blessed Trinity; and therefore S. Augustine truly saith, Irrequietum est cor nostrum, donec revertatur ad eum, that as the heart of man proceeded from God, so it can never be quiet untill it be with God: and therefore all seek for God, but all do not seek aright; because they seeke him not in Christ; for none commeth unto the Father but by me: And therefore these women seeke for Iesus: and so likewise many seeke for Iesus, and yet find him not; for so the Scriptures say, They shall seeke me, but they shall not find me, they shall call upon me, but there shall be none to answer; and so the Church saith, In my bed I sought him whom my soule loveth, I sought him, but I found him not; because she sought him amisse, in her bed, at her ease, she sought him drowsily at home, and not carefully both at home and abroad: so many shall seek Iesus, but shall not find him, because they seek him amisse; for some faine unto themselves a false Iesus, and seek not the true Iesus, which is able to save their soules: and therefore these women go one step further, and seek Iesus of Nazareth (as S. Marke saith) the true flower of Iesse; and because many seek for Iesus of Nazareth, and yet faile of their felicity, as those that sought him for their bellies sake, to be fed by him, but not to feed him in his members; to be cleansed by him, but not to serve him, as those nine lepers that came with reverence to be healed, but gave him no thanks when they were cleansed: therefore these women proceed to the highest staffe of Iacobs ladder, and seek not only Iesum Nazarenum, that is, Iesum floridum, Iesus in prosperity, for prosperities sake, but they seek Iesus that was crucified; for all those that can be contented to eat the sweet bread in the Passover, and not to tast of the sowre herbes, or with S. Peter, to build Tabernacles on mount Tabor, and to forsake and forsweare him on mount Calvary, that is, to professe his name in the times of peace and delectation, and to start aside like a broken bow in the dayes of persecution, they may well seeke Christ, but they shall hardly find any benefit by Christ, because this is to seek their owne, and not to seek that which is Christ Iesus.

How we ought to seek for Iesus, if we would find him.

And therefore as these women sought Iesus that was crucified, and the Apostle saith, God forbid that I should glory in any thing, save in the crosse of Iesus Christ, that is, in the power of his Passion, and in the benefit which I reape from the sufferings of Christ, Quia non silvestris arbor, sed virtus crucifixi, salus nostra; because it is not the wooden Crosse, but the grace and vertue of him that suffered upon the Crosse, that is the cause of our salvation; so let every one of us seeke Iesus that was crucified, and rejoyce in nothing but in that Crosse, that passion of Iesus Christ; and though this be to the Iewes a stumbling blocke, and to the Grecians foolishnesse, yet to them that believe both of the Iewes and Gentiles, It is the power of God unto salvation: so you see what they sought for, Iesus of Nazareth, that was crucified,

1 Cor. 1.

Rom. 1. 16.

a The manner of their seeking.

Secondly, for the manner of their seeking of him, it is here many wayes expressed.

First, that we seek for God betimes.

First, they seek him early, while it was yet dark, saith the Evangelist, they came in that time unto the grave, when by course of nature they should have been in their beds, and so they take away from nature to give to grace; and perhaps all that night they gave no sleep unto their eys, nor slumber unto their eye-lids, for musing of him, who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth; but their eys, like the morning-watch, did continually watch for the morning, that they might seeke him early whom they loved so entirely: so should we seeke Christ betimes, in the dayes of our youth, els if we never seek him untill we have given over seeking all things els, we may justly feare to misse him; because it is just with God, that they which never sought him in their youth, should never find him in their age.

Eccles. 12. 1.

Secondly,

Secondly, They seeke him earnestly, even as Salomons Schollers sought for wisedome, or as Sampson sought for drinke, that is, with all diligence; for they came often unto the grave, they inquired often for him, Et Discipulis recedentibus, mulieres non recedebant; And though Saint Peter the Disciple that is said to love Christ best, and Saint Iohn that is said to bee best beloved of Christ departed, and went their wayes, yet would not these women goe, but still stayed to seeke him, untill they should finde him; for as Wormewood is good for ill stomackes, (saith Mark the Heremite) because it stirreth up the appetite unto a desire of meate; so the sorrow and bitternesse of these women, for the losse of Christ, did the more eagerly stirre and provoke them to search and seeke for Christ; so should we most earnestly seeke for Christ as for hid treasure, till wee finde him.

Secondly, that we should earnestly seeke for Christ. Pro. 2.4. Iudg. 15 18.

Property of Wormewood. Marcus heremita l. 2. de lege spiritualis.

Thirdly, They seeke him mournefully, with watered eyes, and with heavie hearts; for so S. Iohn saith, that Mary stood without at the Sepulcher weeping; and surely not without cause doe they deplore his absence, in whose presence is the fullnesse of joy; for the losse of him is more then the losse of all the world: and therefore they seeke him sorrowing; so should we; for if we put on mourning robes, and weepe for our ordinary friends departed, how should we weepe and waile, when Christ for our sins is parted from us?

Thirdly, That wee should seeke Christ sorrowing till we finde him. Iohn 20 11. Luke 2 48. Bern. Serm. de ass. & bass. cord.

Fourthly, They seeke him onely; for we doe not finde that they inquired for any thing, so as for him, nor any thing beside him, nor any thing after him, saith S. Bernard; so should we seeke for Christ, and for Christ alone; for as the Poets say of the Clitorian well,

Clitorio quicunq; sitim de fonte lavarit,
Vina fugit, gaudetq; meris abstemius undis.

Fourthly, that we should seeke for nothing but for Christ.

Whosoever drinkes of it, will never drinke Wine after it; so the Scriptures say of Christ, Whosoever eateth his flesh, shall never hunger, and whosoever drinketh his bloud, shall never thirst; therefore as Iacob said, when he heard that Ioseph was alive, I have enough; so will every Christian say, I have enough, that I have Iesus Christ, and I seeke no more, because hee is more then all.

Iohn 6. Gen. 45. 28

Fiftly, they seeke him continually untill they finde him; to teach us, that wee should seeke the Lord and his strength, and seeke his face evermore.

Fiftly, that wee should never leave seeking Christ till wee finde him. Psal. 105.

Thus you see how these women sought him, and thus wee Christians should seeke him, and thus wee are taught to seeke him; and I thinke, never people were more faithfully taught then we be and yet alas, I feare that as Plinie saith, There be certaine trees, which he calleth Indociles arbores, quia in alienas non commeant terras; Indocible trees, because they will grow no where, but where they are bred; so there be too too many of us, that will not be taught to seeke after God; but as they are bred of the earth, so they will seeke for nothing but earthly things.

Plin. l. 4. quæ pram

But though these women have hitherto proceeded well, and their thus seeking of Christ deserved to see the place where he lay; yet when they see him, they were not worthy to lay hands on him, by reason of their incredulity; therefore Christ saith unto Mary, touch me not; because faith is the hand that apprehendeth our Saviour, that layeth hold on Christ, whereas infidelity barres us from him; and therefore, though we commend their diligence, which was great, yet we discommend their faith, which was very small; quia non credentes suscitatum, crediderunt sublatum; because that for want of true faith to beleeve that he was risen, they falsly beleeved that he was carried away; and though the Angell assured them of his Resurrection, and confirmed his owne words with an infallible demonstration, behold the place where he lay, and see how the grave is emptie; yet were their hearts empty of all faith, and beleeved no more then, sustulerunt Dominum, they have taken away the Lord; this was the utmost period of their creed.

That the women were tainted with infidelity.

Faith layeth hold on Christ.

And yet for all this, quia error cum pietate sociatus est, because their error proceeded from infirmity, and sprung in them that were full of pietie, the Lord takes

That God rejecteth not the smalest beginning of any good,

pitty upon their devotion, and doth not excommunicate them for their infidelity; for as the Prophet saith, The smoaking flax he will not quench and the bruised reed hee will not breake; so where he seeth the least seed of grace, and the smallest sparke of faith, though implicated with much doubting, and wrapped in the swadling clouts of infidelity; yet will he feede this faith in the cradle, and never extinguish the first impetus or the least good motions in any one: therefore when the Eunuch was so well affected to Religion, as for devotions sake to undertake so long, and so hard a journey as from Æthiopia to Hierusalem, the Lord takes notice of his affection, and his spirit shall convey Philip unto his chariot, to give him better instructions; so when Cornelius feared God, lived justly, and filled up his soule with almes-deeds and good workes, the Lord pitties that so devout a soule should want fuller information in the point of faith, and therfore he sends S. Peter with a full commission to goe beyond the bounds of Iudea, and to step into the way of the Gentiles to instruct this man more particularly in those things which hee confusedly beleeved; for the Schoole resolveth, that Cornelius had faith, before he met with Saint Peter, that is, an implicit faith, which beleeved the Prophets and in the promised Messias, but as yet knew not the person of his Saviour; and so Saint Gregory saith, per fidem venit ad opera, & per opera solidatus est in fide, by his infant faith hee bare the fruits of good workes, and those good workes added both growth and strength unto his faith; but when Saint Peter came his faith is become explicit and informed with true knowledge, which taught him now to beleeve cleerely what before he onely saw in a mystery; and so of all others, it is as cleere as the sun, that God is never wanting with his mercy to a willing heart, though it wanteth that perfection, which it should have; for as he is sometimes found of them that seeke him not, so he never misseth them that seeke him, as the Prophet testifieth, saying, thou Lord never failest them that seeke thee; and as the Apostle saith, he forgets not the love of them that seeke him; And therefore, seeing, as the Schoole saith truely, if it be cautelously interpreted, facienti quod in se est, Deus nunquam denegat gratiam, God never denieth to reach his hand of mercy, to them that with Saint Peter will crie unto him for pittie; and if with these women we have piety in our hearts, God will helpe our weakenesse and supply all the defects of our soules with the graces of his spirit.

How God furthereth our good indeavours.

That Cornelius had faith before S. Peter came to him.

God is never wanting to assist a willing heart,

Psal. 9. 10. Heb. 6. 10.

A Schoole axiome

Thirdly, For the end of their action, and the very depth of their intention, it is here said to be, not as the Souldiers sought him in the Garden of Gethsemane, to crucifie him, but to imbalme him; nor because they could adde any sweetnesse unto him, which was ὅλῳ ἐπιθυμια, wholly delectable, and ὁ γλυκασμός, sweetnes it selfe (as Nazianzen cals him;) but because they would shew their love and affection unto him: So should we seeke him, to imbalme him, that is, to pray unto him, and to praise his Name; Quia aromata mulierum significant preces sanctorum; Because their balmes signifie our prayers, saith a Father: And therefore we should seeke for him with these women, to imbalme him with our prayers; and finding him, we should say with King David, Let our prayers bee directed in thy sight, as the incense, and the lifting up of our hands, as the evening sacrifice: And so you see the devotion of these women, here, accompanied with every circumstance of a most just and holy action.

To what end the women sought for Christ.

Psal. 142. 2.

Quest. But here it may be some will aske, how came these women now so devout, so zealous, and so religious, to seeke, and so earnestly to seeke for Iesus that was crucified? for not long before, one of them was most sinnefull for life, and most hatefull for her lust, prostibula, an unchaste Lady, nay as some thinke a common Curtizan, and a most publique Publican, living in all kinde of lascivious luxury; how then comes she so suddenly to become so devout?

Mary Magdalen was a sinfull woman.

Resp. Alas beloved, they runne farre that never turne; and it is true, that she was plunged in sinne, and possessed of Divels; and all that while, she neither sought God, nor confessed Christ; but when she was converted, and had her eyes opened, then she hated her sins, and forsooke all her wantonnesse, and began to seeke Christ, and most earnestly to love her Saviour.

Quest. I,

Quest. I, but how came she to forsake the one, and to follow the other? or how came she then, and not before then to doe it?

Resp. I answer, that as Adam never sought God, untill God first sought him, and cryed, Adam where art thou? so this daughter of Adam, this lost sheepe had never sought for this now lost shepheard, had not this shepheard formerly sought for this long wandring sheepe; for it is most certaine, that all our power and ability to come to him, proceeds from him; his Spirit must spirare, breath upon us, before wee can aspirare, aspire to him, and his hand must move the golden Cymball before wee can yeelde any pleasant tune; And so Saint Bernard saith, Nemo Domine te quærere valet nisi qui te prius invenerit; No man, O Lord, can seeke for thee, but hee who hath first found thee, that is, when thou hast first found him.

How wee can never find, nor seeke after God, untill God seeke after us.

Bern. de dilig. Deo.

And we have examples enough for the illustration, and as many apparant proofes for the confirmation of this truth. For

God is the first Author of our conversion.

First, When Saint Peter denyed Christ, Peter never repented, untill the Cocke crowed, and Christ looked on him, that is, looked outwardly, and moved him inwardly to goe out, and then to weepe bitterly; and the poore blinde man, that was blinde from his birth, had never seene Christ, had not Christ, as he passed by, seene him, and had compassion on him; so S. Paul had never asked the Lord, What wilt thou have me to doe? had not the Lord said first, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

Iohn 9.1.

Secondly, Christ saith expresly, that as No man commeth unto the Father but by him, that is, as he is a Mediator betwixt God and man; so, no man commeth unto him, that is, to beleeve in him, to be his Saviour, except the Father, ἑλκύσῃ αὐτὸν, doth draw him; and so the Church saith, Draw me and I will runne after thee; where you see, grace is premised, and then the action is performed; So when the Spirit said unto Esayas, Cry, he knew not what to cry, untill the Spirit had first taught him; so when the Spirit said unto Ezekiel, Sonne of man stand upon thy feet, the Spirit himselfe did set him upon his feete, before he could stand; and so the Prophet Ieremy saith, Turne us, O Lord, and we shall be turned; and so the Apostle, after he had said, Worke out your salvation with feare and trembling, lest that any man should mistake him, and thinke that he hath any manner of power of himselfe to doe the same, he sheweth immediately that all such power is from God; because it is God that worketh in us both τὸ θέλειν καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν to will and to effect; & so S. Augustine saith, Da Domine quod jubes & jube, quod vis; Give us, O Lord, power to performe what thou commandest, and then command what thou wilt; and so I might heape a cloud of witnesses to prove, that neither this woman could, nor any other man can turne to God, or performe the will of God, untill God himselfe doth enlighten them, assist them, inable them, and draw them to doe it.

God worketh in us before we can worke his will. Iohn 6.44. Cant. 1.4.

Esay 4.6.

Ezek. 2.1, 3.

Lam. 5.21.

Phil 2.13.

And yet we must not so understand it, as that he doth it violently by way of coaction, but sweetly and gently by way of insinuation; for he draweth us leni spiritu non dura manu, by an inward sweet influence, and not by any outward extreame violence; for the will is no will if it be compelled; and therefore as Satan cannot force us to sinne, but onely by way of suggestion; so God will not compell us to grace, but onely by way of inclination, and a sweet secret operation of his Spirit upon our wils and affections, without which notwithstanding, as I shewed you before, we shall never be able to seeke for Christ to come to God; and therefore to expresse both the necessity of such helpe, and the manner of Gods working it in us, our Church most excellently saith, Lord have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts, not compell them, but incline them to keepe this Law: And therefore hence it is apparant, that the reason why all men doe not seeke for Christ, and serve their God, is, because God in Iustice leaves them, and doth not thus incline their hearts to seeke for him; for if hee did it, how could they withstand it? for who hath ever resisted his will?

That God compelleth not his servants to doe any good.

How God worketh our willingnesse to do good.

Why the wicked seeke not God.

Rom 9.19.

Ob. If then you will say the fault is in God, that all men doe not seeke for God; because hee doth not move and incline their hearts to seeke after him.

Sol. I answer, that this is a false conclusion, laide upon no good foundation; for in the actions of the wicked he doth not drive them to sinne, nor hath the least finger in their iniquity, but he onely leaveth them to their owne inventions; and so the Prophet saith, Thy destruction is from thy selfe; and he is a debtor to no man, that he should be bound to sustaine him from falling, or to refraine him from sin: and therefore, if to the one he sheweth favour, and doth incline his heart to leave his sinnes and to seeke for Christ, Illi facit indebitam misericordiam, Hee doth it freely out of his mercy; and if to the rest he doth not this, he cannot be reproved of any fault; Quia illis facit debitam justitiam; because he doth but justly leave them, as S. Augustine speaketh.

Hosea 13.9.

And therefore I cannot sufficiently wonder at those men, eminent in place, and excellent for words, that, lessening this helpe and favour of God, which is the α and ω, the beginning, continuing, and finishing of all the good things that are in the best Saints of God, would, I know not for what cause, ascribe more power and ability unto man, then is in any, I say the best, of themselves.

And yet, I may cease my wondring, because as the Sodomites groped for the doores in the cleere day, and the Iewes, notwithstanding all the invincible and unanswerable apparant arguments to prove the comming of the Messiah, would never beleeve it to this very day; So that subtill Serpent still striveth to darken our eyes, many times, that we cannot see the cleerest light; And so you see the action of these women, and how they came to be so full of zeale and devotion: Out of which wee may observe these two speciall points for our instruction.

Gen.19.11.

Two speciall observations from the former doctrine First, that many women were made Instruments of great goodnes.

1. That many Women have beene found most zealous, and religious in the service of God; for though Satan hath much blemished the beauty of this Sexe, by making them his often Instruments to worke mischiefe, as Eva to seduce Adam, Dalila to intrap Sampson, Iezabel to infatuate Ahab, and many others, to further many Heresies; so hath God much honoured them, in making them partakers of great mercies, and often instruments of his glory, as Mary to conceive him, Elizabeth to propheſie of him, Hanna to rejoyce to see him, Mary Magdalen to annoint him, Martha to entertaine him, and these three gracious Women to bee the first seekers, and the first seers of him after death, and the first witnesses of his Resurrection unto life: I might reckon many other women that trusted in God, and were famous in their generations, and as Lampes shining in the world, whereof some were faithfull Martyrs of Iesus Christ, some bountifull entertainers of the servants of Christ, some able to convert their unbeleeving Husbands, and some to instruct their Houſholds in the feare of God, as that elect Lady, unto whom Saint John writeth; And I might speake of Sara, Rebecca, Debora, Iudith, Abigail, Bathsheba, Hester, Dorcas, Loys, Phebe, Claudia, Maxima, Monica, Pulcheria, Gorgonia, Trasilla, and many more: But seeing, when it was granted to no man to be the Father, God vouchsafed to accept a woman to be the Mother of Christ, this only thing is sufficient to shew, how abundantly he loved, and how worthily he deserveth the love of women.

2 Ep.Iohn.v.1.

Wherefore elect and blessed Ladies, deare and Christian women, let us blesse that God, which hath so honoured and blessed you, let us remember that honour is deceitfull, and beauty is vanity, but the woman that feareth the Lord shall bee praised: and therefore imitate not that graceleſse Iezabel, that painted her face with divers colours, and defiled her minde with haynous sinnes, nor those daughters of Ierusalem, which the Prophet Esay describeth, and who tooke such delight in their tinckling ornaments, and trumperies of vanities, and did love to sit at ease in Sion, but imitate that good daughter of Sion, whose beauty and glory is within, and those Elect Ladies, and blessed women, whose praise is in the Gospell.

Pro. 31.30.

Esay 3.19,20.&c.

Psal.45.14.

And if, at any time heretofore, you have followed Iezabell, and those dainty

Dames

Dames in transgression, yet do you now and ever hereafter follow Mary Magdalen in your true conversion; for she loved much, because much was forgiven her, and she lived most strict and religiously in her age, because she had lived so loosly and so dissolutely in her youth; for as Dyonisius and Egesippus doe record, she betook her selfe to a most solitary life, sequestred from all worldly pleasures, in the mountaine Balma, full thirty yeeres together, in all which time she gave her selfe to meditation, fasting, and prayer, and, as Iosephus writeth, in all that time she could never indure any company; for now she had given a perfect bill of divorce unto all wantonnesse, and had disrobed her selfe of all her sumptuous weedes and alluring paludaments, and chose rather to suffer a sharp affliction, and to endure a hard penance with the children of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

Luke 7 47.

Heb. 11. 25.

Secondly, seeing that the grace of God to move and incline our hearts must be the first agent in the conversion of our soules, and that God hath his owne times and houres, and moments to call us into his Vineyard, some at the sixth, some at the ninth, and some at the eleventh houre, we should not despaire of the conversion of any one; for as to commit sinne is the death of the soule, so to despaire is the stepping downe to the lowest Hell: and therefore seeing God is multus ad misericordiam, of much mercy, to forgive many sins, and of great mercy, to forgive great sins, let us never despaire of the eternall and omnipotent mercy of God; for though thy sins were as haynous as Mary Magdalens, yet one word of Christs mouth is able to cast out all divels out of thy soule; though they were as vilious as Peters, yet one looke of Christs favour is able to worke grace and repentance in thy soule; and though they were as many as Manasses, and as red as scarlet, yet one drop of the bloud of Christ, is able to wash them all away, and to make thy crimson soule as white as snow; and therefore returne, O Shunamite, returne, returne, and call to God for grace; say unto the Lord, that it is time that he have mercy upon thy soule, yea, the time is come: And so much for the devotion of the woman.

a That we should never despaire of any mans conversion.

Isidor. de summo bono.

Esay 55.

The third part.

Part 3.

CHAP. I.

Of the Angels service unto Christ, and how terrible they be to the wicked.

THirdly, The Office of the Angels is here plainely expressed; for though Saint Marke saith, he was a young man, yet Saint Matthew saith, hee was an Angell; for the Angels many times assumed outward formes, to performe some offices, and deposed the same againe, after the finishing of their worke; and so they used those formes as one useth his garments, to put it on and off at his pleasure, and not as our Saviour did; for Christ really united himselfe to the forme that he assumed, and assumed it, never to depose it: and therefore they are said onely to appeare like men, but Christ is said to bee made man.

3 The office of the Angels.

The Angels often appeared like men, but were never made men.

This Angell then being sent to comfort, and not to astonish these women, hee tooke upon him the forme of a man, which is a forme most customable, that hee might might not affright them, and he tooke the forme of a young man, which is a forme most amiable, that he might delight them; and he is called an Angell, ab officio, non natura; In respect of his office, not of his nature; Nam ex eo quod est, spiritus est, ex eo quod agit, Angelus est; For in that which he is, he is a Spirit, and in that he is sent as a Messenger, he is an Angell, saith Saint Augustine; and therefore he is a Spirit, ab essentia, in respect of his being, and he is a young man, a forma, in respect of the forme wherein he appeared, and he is an Angell, ab officio, in respect of that duty and office, which he was now to discharge: And I finde the same here to be three-fold.

Aug in Psal. 104.

The office of the Angell here expressed is three-fold.

1. In respect of Christ, that was risen.
2. In respect of the Keepers, that were affrighted.
3. And principally in respect of the Women, that were to be comforted.

Three excellencies of the Angels

First, The Angels are excellent in all things, but for three things most excellent.

Mat. 18. 10.

First; Purity of substance, for they alwaies behold the face of God, into whose presence no impure thing can approach.

Psal. 18. 10.

Secondly, Readinesse of obedience; for the Prophet speaking of their service, saith, Hee rode upon Cherub, and did flie, hee came flying upon the wings of the winde.

Heb. 1. 7.

Thirdly, Ferventnesse of charity; for he maketh his Angels Spirits, and his Ministers a flame of fire, whereby they burne in love, not onely one towards another, but also towards us poore miserable men; for they rejoyce at our conversion, and being converted, they become our Guardians in our conversation, to preserve us in all our waies, that we dash not our foot against a stone.

Luke 15. 10.

Psal 61. 11.

And these three things were shadowed in those Cherubims, made by Salomon to over-shadow the mercy seate; for they were made of fine gold, to note their purity, with their wings spread, to note their celerity, and with their faces looking one towards another, to note their charity.

1 King 6. 23.

2 Chron. 3. 12.

And yet for all their excellency, when God brought his first begotten Sonne into the world, he commanded them all to doe him service, saying, Worship him all ye Angels; and, so they did; for when he was to be conceived, the Angell brought tydings unto that blessed Virgin; when he was borne, the Angels told the same unto the shepheards; when his life was sought for by Herod, the Angell revealed the same unto Ioseph, and warned him to flie into Egypt; when Herod was dead, the Angell bad Ioseph returne into the land of Iury; when Satan had left tempting him, the Angels came and ministred unto him; when his soule was exceeding sorrowfull unto death, the Angels attended to comfort him; and here, when his Body was to be raised from death, the Angel descended to rowle away that mighty stone, which his adversaries had laid upon his grave; Non propter impotentiã Christi, sed propter obedientiam Angeli; Not that Christ was unable to doe it himselfe, (for hee that is able to shake the earth, and of the stones to raise up children unto Abraham, shall we thinke him unable to lift up a stone?) but to declare his soveraigne authority over these creatures of soveraigne dignity; he needs but say unto his Angell, Doe this and he doth it: And therefore if the Angels, which never offended him, be ever so ready to doe him service, how much more willing should we be to serve him? for to whom much is given, of them much shall be required; and we know he gave more to us, for he gave his Sonne unto us; and he did more for us, for he dyed for us; and he shewed more love towards us, for he was made one with us, then ever he did unto the Angels: and therefore I say no more, but we are obliged to the more thankefullnesse.

1 How the Angels alwaies did service unto our Saviour Christ.

Luke 12. 48.

2 How the Angels punish wicked men.

Caietan in Mat. c. 28.

Psal. 91. 11.

Secondly, The Angell here descended, to affright and terrifie these wicked Keepers; and therefore the Keepers at the sight of him, Intus timent, exterim cruciuntur, ut ferè examines redduntur, were astonied, and became as dead men; for though they have a charge to cherish the godly, and to preserve them so, in all their waies, that they dash not their foote against a stone; yet they are likewise charged charged to punish the wicked, and to dash them in peeces against every stone; and therefore they consumed Sodom, they plagued Ægypt, they destroyed 100. 80. 5000. men, in the hoste of the Assyrians; and here the very countenance of one Angell doth so terrifie these wicked men, that they are astonied and become as dead men: and no marvell, for his countenance is admirable, it was like lightning, and his garment white as snow; their voice is terrible, as the voice of God; and I heard thy voice, (saith Adam unto God) and I was afraid; for as it is Vox suaviter dulcis & dulciter suavis; a voice like the sweet and melodious voice of Harpers, harping with their harpes unto the godly; so it is Vox mirabiliter terribilis, & terribiliter mirabilis; a voice like the sound of many waters, that is, wonderfully terrible unto the wicked, it shaketh the Cedars of Libanus, and terrifieth the very hearts of the ungodly; and their power is incredible, Ye Angels of his, (saith David) that excell in strength.

Gen. 19. Exod. 12. 29. 2 King. 19. 35.

Gen. 3. 10.

Revel. 19. 8.

Psal. 103. 20.

Therfore senceless, godless men, will ye not feare him, that as he hath his army of little ones, that are able to destroy the greatest Potentates of the world, as the frogges, flies, and caterpillars subdued Pharaoh and all his kingdome; so he hath his army of great ones, of these mighty Angels, as the Apostle cals them, to fight against you, poore silly wormes of the earth? Alas, if their countenance be so admirable, their voice so terrible, and their power so incredible (as I shewed before) what shall you do, when they shall have a power superadded, a power given them to destroy the earth, and a shaking blade put into their hands, not only to keepe the way of the tree of life, but also to cut downe the wicked like grasse, & to cast them forth into eternall death? O consider this you that forget God, lest he teare you in peeces while there is none to help you; for this is a dolefull and a fearefull case, a most grievous curse pronounced by David, To have those things which should be for your advantage, to be an occasion of falling, that is, to have those glorious Angels, which are appointed by God to save and preserve you, if you serve God, to be transmuted by your sins to destroy and consume you: and therefore, Kisse the sonne, lest he be angry, for if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little, blessed are all they that trust in him.

Revel. 10. 1.

That it is unpossible to escape the hands of any destroying Angell.

Psal. 69. 23.

Psal. 5. 27.

Thirdly, This Angell here descended in respect of the women, and that for three speciall ends,

3 How the Angels serve the godly.

For { 1. For their reprehention. 2. For their consolation. 3. For their instruction.

1. Mary Magdalen and the other Maries held nothing too deere for Christ in his life time, and they forget him not being dead, but they repute it a great happinesse to performe their last devotions to his sacred corps; and therefore they come to seeke him, and they seeke him to annoint him; and yet the Angell

1 The reprehention of the women

For { 1. Reproves them for the former. 2. Disappoints their expectation in the latter.

Two things

1. Though affectus amoris non est vituperandus, their love and affection towards him is much to be commended, yet, defectus fidei non est negandus, their want of faith cannot be excused, and therefore the Angell cheekes their unbeliefe with a why seeke ye the living among the dead?

1 The women reproved.

2. Though they shewed many pledges of their affection to him living and to him dead, for they were the last at his Crosse and the first at his grave, they staid longest there and came soonest here, like brave Captaines that goe first and returne last from the field; yet, because they had no faith, to beleeve him alive, their hope to see him dead was quite dead; for it had beene some calme of comfort, after a great storme of teares, to have found his body though dead, that they might have done the last office of their love unto it, quia viso corpore recalescit amor, because the sight of his carcasse would have revived their love and fetcht life into that againe, as S. Ambrose saith; but alas, his corps is conveyed away, and there is nothing left but an empty grave, to bee now repleniſhed with these womens

2 Their expectation frustrated.

The property of true love.

teares;

teares; quia ungendi labore pereunte, lugendi dolor accrevit; for now their deſire to annoint him being fruſtrated, their griefe to lament the loſſe of him is renued; and Saint Auguſtine affirmeth, that ſublatus de monumento, did more afflict them then occiſus in ligno; becauſe that after death, they had his dead body to love, but now they have nothing but griefe; ſo, as Origen ſaith, defuit obſequio, qui non defuit dolori, defuit quem condirent, ſed non defuit quem plorarent, eò magis plorabant, quo magis ille deerat: he was wanting to accept their ſervice, that was not wanting, to increaſe their griefe, hee was wanting to bee imbalmed, that was not wanting to be lamented, and the more they wanted him the more they bewailed him, for now they mourne and will not bee comforted.

The griefe of women increaſed.

Why vaine-hopes are fruſtrate.

And ſo you ſee how God doth fruſtrate all vaine hopes, though they be joyned with good deſires, becauſe they are not ſetled upon good grounds: and therefore if we would be truely comforted, we muſt be rightly inſtructed, that our hope doth proceed from faith, and our faith ſprings from the truth of Gods ſpirit, which tells us what wee ſhould hope for, and that hope ſhall never bee confounded.

2 The conſolation of the women.

2. In all likelyhood, theſe women had approached the Sepulcher before, but now upon the viſion and ſight of the Angell they recoyled, and as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, ſtarted aſide like a broken bow, as being amazed at the ſplendencie of ſo bright an obiect; and it is no wonder, if the weaker ſex are terrified, ſeeing Worthies have trembled at ſuch apparitions; for Zachary, a man, and more then that, a Prieſt, and which might moſt comfort him, exerciſing his holy function, yet feare fell upon him at the ſight of an Angell; and the Iewes had a tradition, that ſuch ſights were ominous and portended death; for alas, my Lord, ſaid Gideon, I have ſeene an Angell and ſhall die; but the Lord takes away that ſuſpition from Gideon, ſaying, thou ſhalt not die at all; ſo doth this Angell from theſe women, ſaying, feare you not, becauſe I am ſent for your conſolation, and not for your deſtruction: and ſo we finde that this Angell comforteth theſe women many waies, but eſpecially

The ſight of an Angell how terrible.

A Iewiſh traditió.

Iudges 6.22.

Verſ. 23.

1. By the manner of his apparition.
2. By his kinde and friendly allocution.

} Which are two moſt excellent waies to comfort any diſtreſſed ſoule.

CHAP. II.

How the Angell comforteth theſe women divers waies.

How the Angell comforteth the women two waies

1 By his apparitió

FIrſt, Hee appeared unto them, not in a blacke mournefull robe, but in a garment white as ſnow, which ſignifieth purity, and is the enſigne of joy and felicity, and he aſſumed the ſhape of a young man, whoſe forme muſt needs be amiable unto all men, and hee ſate on the right ſide, which ſignifieth a ſucceſſive happineſſe unto their intentions; All good ſignes, all ſignes of comfort: But Marke 16.5. Haymo in poſtil. ſuper Evangel. die paſch.

2 By his allocutió

Secondly, as theſe dumbe ſhewes doe a little conſolate their afrighted ſoules, ſo his gracious ſpeech doth wholly expell all feare and ſorrow from their afflicted hearts; for he ſaid unto the women, Feare you not, for I know that you ſeeke Ieſus that was crucified, Wherein is intimated three ſpeciall things.

Three things intimated.

Videlicet,
1. Whom we ought to feare.
2. Who ought, and who ought not to feare.
3. How we ought to feare.

} For

1 Whom wee ought to feare.

That we need not feare men, Angels, divels. Mat. 10.28.

Rom. 8.

Firſt, We need not feare Men, Angels, Divels; for that is the meaning of the Angels words unto the women; you need not feare the Iewes, you need not feare me, you need not feare the very divels; for they are but your fellow ſervants, and the greateſt of all theſe can (and without the leave and permiſſion of God they cannot) but confiſcate your goods, and caſt your bodies into the the fire; for when they have done so, they can doe no more, saith Christ; but God can cast both body and soule into Hell fire: and therefore as we should hate nothing but sinne; because nothing but sinne makes us to be hated of God; so wee should feare none but God; because, if God be with us, none can hurt us, nothing can harme us.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that we should feare our superiours, as Kings, Magistrates, Parents, Preachers, and such like; therefore others, besides God, are to be feared.

Sol. I answer, that our superiours have a power and authority over us; but first, it is potestas data, non innata; a power given them from above, and not inbred in themselves; for (as our Saviour saith unto Pilate) there could be no power in man, except it were given him from God; and secondly, it is potestas limitata, a power limited, so farre as God permitteth and no further; for God saith unto them, as he doth unto the sea, Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further, here shalt thou stay thy proud waves: and therefore I confesse that they are to be feared, κατα τι, in respect of that concessed and received power which they have from God; and so indeed we feare not them but the power and authority of God in them; but not absolutely; because they have not absolute power; but God hath all and absolute power, a power both of body and soule: and therefore God onely is to be feared absolutely, in all respects: But then

Power of the creatures how qualified.

Iohn 19.12.

In what sense and how farre parents and magistrates are to be feared.

Ob. Secondly, It may be said, that objectum timoris malum, The object of feare is evill; for we love and desire the good, and we feare only that which is evill: And therefore, how can it bee, that wee should feare him, which is the chiefest good?

Evill the object of feare.

Sol. Answer, That it is true, that the object of feare is evill, and that evill to come; for what is past, we call τὴν λύπην, Heavinesse, which is the relique and the effect of that evill, which we have suffered; but that which is to come, we call τὴν φόβον, Feare; And yet I say, that we may feare that which is good in two respects.

In what sense we may bee said to feare God, which is the chiefest good.

First, We may feare that which is good, Ne bonum à nobis per malum auferatur, Lest that good be taken away from us, by reason of our evill; So the body feareth death, which is the parting of the soule from the body, lest by that death it should be deprived of the fruition of the soule; So we feare God that is good, lest that for our evill he will leave us, and deprive us of the fruition of his most blessed Society.

1 Resp.

Secondly, We may feare that which is good, Ne per bonum, propter malum, malum nobis inferatur, Lest that which is good should inflict some evill upon us, for our evill; So the Malefactor feareth the Judge, lest the uprightnesse of the Judge, should cause punishment to be inflicted upon him, for his evill deeds; So we feare the good God, lest he should punish us for our sins; And so in very deede, the thing that we feare, is not his goodnesse, but the just desert of our owne wickednesse; For to speake properly, God, as he is φιλανθροπως, a lover of man, and the chiefest good, cannot be feared; but he is onely to bee feared as he is a just Judge, which rendereth vengeance to them that know not God: And therefore, though the object of feare be evill, yet in these respects, we ought while we live on earth, (for in Heaven there is no feare, because perfect charity expelleth feare) to feare God, the chiefest good; And blessed is he that alwaies feareth; for he that feareth the Lord, will doe no evill; But as the bankes of a River doe bound in the waters from overflowing, so doth the feare of God hedge in our affections, that it suffereth not our soules to sin; whereas the bankes being broken and troden downe, the waters then, Velut agmine facto, Will rush in heapes, and soone cover the whole face of the plaines; So the feare of God being once rejected, Bloud toucheth bloud, as the Prophet saith, and all sins and wickednesse will be committed even with greedinesse.

2 Resp.

What is the thing that we justly feare in God.

2 Thess. 1.8.

1 Iohn 4.1.

Psal 4.7.

Hosea 4.2.

Secondly, The Angell doth herein denotate, who ought, and who ought not to feare; for he saith unto the Women, Feare you not; because you seeke Iesus of 2 Who ought to feare.

Nazareth that was crucified; which is all one, as if he had ſaid, They that ſeeke Chriſt, or goe about to doe the will of Chriſt, to honour him, to imbalme him with their odoriferous prayers, and the ſweet-ſmelling flowers of pious and religious workes, as you doe, they need not feare; for no evill can happen unto them, becauſe God is unto ſuch a moſt loving Father, that will doe them good, and not evill all the dayes of their life: but they that ſeeke to preſſe him downe, and to trample him under feete, like the Tyrants, or to ſuppreſſe his truth, like the Heretickes, or ſeeke him, not crucified, but to crucifie him againe, and to make a mocke of him, by their wicked ſins, as the Apoſtle ſaith the wicked ſinners do, They may well, with theſe curſed Keepers feare and tremble; becauſe God will be unto ſuch a moſt juſt Iudge, that will render unto every one according to his deeds: And ſo you ſee, who neede not feare, thoſe good and godly Saints that ſeeke for Chriſt, that live like Chriſtians; for the more godly we are, the leſſe we need to feare; and if we had no ſin, we had need of no feare, the true morall cauſe of feare being ſinne; for in Heaven among the Saints, there is no feare, becauſe there is no ſin; but there is perfect love, & perfect love expelleth feare; becauſe feare is the defect of love, and the effect of ſin: for our firſt Parents converſt with God in Paradiſe very confidently, and never grew timerous, till they became ſinfull; and if Adam had never ſinned, Adam needed never to have feared; but he had no ſooner experience of evill, but he became preſently acquainted with feare, and when he had once tranſgreſſed, then aſſoone as ever hee heard the voice of God, hee feared; For ſo he ſaith, I heard thy voice in the Garden, and I was afraid; feare, ſhame and griefe, being the waiting maides of ſin.

Heb. 6. 6.

Rom. 2. 6.

Sinne brought feare into the World.

Gen. 3. 10.

But they that goe on in ſin, and drinke iniquity like water, they may well feare and tremble, and the more they ſinne, the more they ſhould be aſhamed, and the more they ſinne, the more they ſhould feare; becauſe the Lord hateth all them that worke wickedneſſe, and it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the living God: And therefore Saint Iames ſaith, That the divels feare, and tremble; and no doubt but their feare is exceeding great, becauſe their ſinnes are great: And therefore, Feare not, O Iacob my ſervant (ſaith the Lord) but rejoyce O ye Righteous, and be glad all ye that are true of heart; For the more you feare, the leſſe you need to feare; the more you feare your ſelves to fall to ſinne, the leſſe you neede to feare my wrath to puniſh you for your ſins; this bleſſed feare to ſin, expelleth feare of vengeance: But goe-to-now you careleſſe wicked wretches, weepe and howle, for your miſeries that ſhall come upon you; For ſeeing you have no feare to ſin, you ſhould feare and tremble at the conſideration of that puniſhment, which you muſt ſuffer for your ſins; for ſo our Saviour ſaith, You ſhould feare to have both body and ſoule caſt into hell fire, which is as if he bad ſaid, Though you feare not to ſin, yet you may and ſhould feare this puniſhment for ſinne.

Pſal. 5. 5. Heb. 10. 31. The more ſinfull we are, the more we ought to feare

Iames 5. 1.

Luke 12. 5.

Therefore, though nature had put feare into the hearts of theſe women; yet were not theſe women ſo fearefull as thoſe men of warre, that were ſent and ſet to guard the Sepulcher; becauſe that as ſinne increaſeth, ſo feare multiplieth; and the wicked ſometimes, doe ſuggeſt dreadfull fancies to themſelves, without any reall cauſe, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, they are afraid, where no feare is, that is, when there is no cauſe and they have no reaſon to bee afraid, and when no enemie makes after them, yet they runne though none purſues them; and the reaſon hereof is rendered by Saint Hierom, Quia nihil tutum apud diabolum; becauſe there is nothing ſafe with the divels ſervants, and therefore a ſervile feare doth alwaies poſſeſſe their hearts; but the righteous is bold as a Lyon, and no comfort is like that, which is founded upon innocency, which is like an armour of proofe to every juſt and honeſt man, to keepe out both feare and ſhame, whereas a guilty conſcience is ever projecting fearefull objects, and makes cruell men ever cowards, as theſe ſouldiers were halfe dead with feare; and therefore who would not feare to ſin, that makes us thus afraid? Magnum ſupplicium peccare, etiamſi non puniatur, becauſe ſinne of it ſelfe is a moſt dreadfull ſting, and brings puniſhment enough with it, though

The wicked many times feare without cauſe.

Innocency the beſt armour of defence.

Conſcientia vecordes intrat metus. Cor: Tacitus.

though there were none other punishment, imposed for it, saith Saint Chrysostome.

Thirdly, The Angell (perhaps) herein, would intimate how we ought to feare; for there is too little feare, and this proceedeth Ex carentia fidei, through want of faith; and there is too much feare, and this springeth Ex superabundantia spei, through too much confidence and excesse of hope; and both these sorts of men Tum sperando, tum desperando, miserè pereunt, By hoping vainely, or fearing desperately, doe miserably perish: And therefore the Angell might well dissuade these Women from both these kindes of feare, and say, Feare you not: Too little you do not, for I see you affrighted; and too much, you may not, you need not, because you seeke Iesus that was crucified; but in a meane and middle sort, you may, and you should feare; for Blessed is the man that alwaies feareth; Because there bee three states of a Christian man.

3 How, or after what manner wee ought to feare God.

Three estates of a Christian.

1. The state of grace, in Gods favour.
2. The state of relaps into any sin.
3. The state of recovery, by repentance.

} And

Feare must be wanting in none of these; For

That God ought to be feared in every state.

First, In the state of grace, wee must feare to leese the goodnesse of God; for so the Apostle saith, Thou that standest by faith, be not high minded, but feare.

1 Of Grace. Rom 11.20.

Secondly, In the state of relaps, we must feare to feele the justice of God; for so the good thiefe said upon the Crosse, Feares thou not, seeing thou art in the state of condemnation?

2 Of Relaps. Luke 23.40.

Thirdly, In the state of recovery, God must be feared, for his double favour; for so the Prophet saith, With thee there is mercy, that thou maist be feared, that is, mercy to forgive, that we may be afraid to offend: And thus Saint Bernard saith, In statu gratiæ time, ne non dignè operaris ea. In the state of Gods favour feare, lest thou turne the graces of God into wantonnesse, as the false Steward, that wasted his Masters goods, and the slothfull servant, that hid his Lords Talent have done. In statu lapsus time, quia reliquit te, custodia tua, spiritus Deus, & Angeli Dei; In the state of sin feare, because God hath forsaken thee, and the Angels of God have no charge of thee; & in statu restitutionis time, quia deterius est recidere quam incidere; and in the state of restauration feare to relapse, because reciduation is far more dangerous then the transgression, and the second fall is worse then the first.

3 Of Recovery. Psal. 130.4

Luke 16.1.

Mat. 25.18. & 25.

And so you see the meaning of this Angels consolatorie words unto the women, Feare you not, that is, not me, not men, not divels; for they feare themselves, and tremble, and they cannot hurt you, because you seeke Iesus that was crucified, and you walke in the light, therefore you cannot stumble; for he that walketh in the light stumbleth not, saith our Saviour: but you may, and should feare God, with a filiall feare, that is, To stand in awe to offend his blessed Majesty; for this expelleth all sin and wickednesse from us, and continueth the love and favour of God unto us.

Iames 2.19.

Iohn 11.9.

Two speciall observations.

And here from this pious practice of this Angell, in terrifying the souldiers, and comforting the women, you may observe the different state of the godly and of the wicked; for though both may grone alike under the crosse, both may feare, yet not in like measure, not for the same continuance; for the wicked Watchmen doe lie still in their feare, but the Angell speakes comfortably to these good women, saying, Feare you not, God intayling his blessings upon his children, and exterminating the wicked from the fruition thereof; as we see, when all the world was washed to nothing, Noah and his family sate still in his drie Cabin, and blessing God for his deliverance; and God suspends the fire from burning the three children in the bellie of the furnace, when in the very mouth thereof he turnes the Souldiers into ashes by the same flames; and therefore, my deare brethren, if ever you doe looke for safety, if you desire comfort, get you within the pale and circumference of Gods Church, and there serve your God and sinne

1 Observat. The different state of the godly and the wicked. The wicked partake not of the consolation of the godly.

Gen 7.22,23.

Dan. 3.22.

not, and so you shall participate of those blessings which the Lord hath laid up for them that feare him.

2 Observat. Gods method with his children.

They begin in sorrow and end in joy.

We may likewise observe from hence the method of God, how he proceedes with his children as he doth with these women, who began in feare, but did end in comfort; because afflictions season and dispose the godly, and cause them to welcome felicity with the better and the greater affection; and therefore to incourage us to proceed in this way, the Lord himselfe did tread this thornie path, and went from Mount Calvery to Mount Olivet, from the Crosse unto the Cloud, and from the Crowne of Thornes unto the Crowne of Glory, and S. Paul knew none other way, but through many afflictions to enter into the kingdome of heaven.

The wicked have their heaven upon earth.

But with the wicked it is cleane contrary, for as the just doe sowe in teares and reape in joy, as Lazarus did live here poore and full of sores, but is now translated into Abrahams bosome; so the wicked sowe in joy and reape in teares, as Dives did make holyday in this world, when his life was comicall and his death tragicall; because he began in mirth, while he spent his life in pleasure, and ended in misery, when death wherried him to hell: And therfore, if we be wise, we will say with S. Augustine, Domine, hìc ure, hic seca; ô Lord, do what thou wilt with me here, and let me not onely taste, but also fill me with the wormewood of afflictions, in this life, that I may escape the gall of bitternesse hereafter in the life to come.

And so much for the Angels comforting of these weake and comfortlesse women.

3 The instruction of the women. Every benefit requires a duty.

Thirdly, this Angell doth not only comfort and shew benignity unto these Women, but he doth also instruct them, and require a duty from them; Quia beneficium exigit officium, Because every favour shewed requires a willingnesse to have our service performed, and as Aristotle saith, ἀνθυπερτῆσαι δεῖ τὸ χαρισαμένου ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀυτὸν ἄρξαι χαριζόμενον, It behoveth the party gratified, to be proportionably serviceable to him that did him kindnesse; so that every good turne in nature is obligatory, and whatsoever benefiteth, ipso facto bindeth: And therefore this Angel setteth downe unto these Women, two especiall lessons.

Aristot. Ethic. l. 5. c. 5.

Two especiall lessons for the women.

The first of Theorie, which they must know.
The second of practise, which they must doe.

} And both these, knowledge and practise, must be ever joyned together, ever walke together, and never be separated from the life of any Christian man.

CHAP. III.

How the Angell informeth the Women of the Resurrection of Christ many waies, and how the ubiquity of Christ his Body is here confuted by this Angell.

1 The lesson of Theorie or knowledge. The Angell sheweth the Resurrection of Christ, three manner of waies.

FOr the first, In the lesson of Theorie, this Angell sheweth unto these women the Resurrection of Christ, and that as you may see three especiall waies.

1. By way of Negation, He is not here.
2. By way of Confirmation, For he is risen.
3. By way of Illustration, For he is risen, as he said, and as you may see; Come see the place where the Lord lay.

1 By way of Negation. That this assertion of the Angell quite overthroweth that doctrine of the ubiquity of Christs Body.

First, The Angell saith, Christ is not here, that is, in respect of his corporall presence; for otherwise, as he is God, he was there, and in all other places of the world; but as he is a man, consisting of a true naturall body, defined and measured with quantity, and bounded with the limits of his trinary Dimensions, bredth, length and thickenesse, and all other properties of a true body, he was gone, and was

was not there: And therefore this onely place of Scripture, if there were none other, is sufficient to disprove all the ubiquitaries in the World; for if his body was in every place, how could the Angell say, that hee was not in that place?

It is true, that Christ may be said to be every where, and that the Virgins Son may be said to have created the World, but how? Non per proprietatem naturarum, sed per communicationem proprietatum, Not by the propriety of the Natures, but by the communication of properties, and that not as transfused, the properties of the one Nature into the other, but as predicated of whole Christ in respect of the personall union of the one Nature with the other; For though the Apostle saith, That in him dwelleth the fulnesse of the God-head bodily; yet we must note a difference betweene Divinitatem communicari humanitati, To communicate the Deity, and all the divine properties unto the humanity, Et Divinitatem inhabitare in humanitate. And to have the Divinity, and all the divine properties to dwell in the humanity, and so to dwell, not as he doth in us, by his grace, but by a personall union unto his Nature: And therefore as a House, by reason of a mans dwelling in it, cannot be said to goe or to speake, but the man dwelling in the House may be said to doe the same; so the body of Christ, by reason of the inhabitation of the Deity, cannot be said to know all things, or to be every where; but the God-head that dwelleth in that body, may be, and is every where; for though the humanity of Christ subsisteth in the person of the Sonne of God, (and in that respect may be said to bee every where, because that having no subsistence of its owne, it subsisteth in a person that is every where,) yet in respect of its Essence, being a finite creature, it is no wayes capable of the divine properties: And therefore though Christ personally may be said to be in all places, or the Body of Christ virtually, respectu virtutis servatricis, that is, in respect of his saving vertue (as the Sunne, which is essentially in Heaven, but virtually in all inferior bodies) may be said to bee every where; yet the Body of Christ locally, or the manhood of Christ solely considered, must needs be in one place: Otherwise, how could his manhood be contained within the straights of the Virgins wombe, if his manhood was every where? How could his body be nayled to the Crosse, wrapped in clothes, laide in the Sepulcher, if that his body was so spatious as that no limits could containe it? Or how could the Angell say, He is not here, if he was every where? Surely this would evert all the Articles of our Faith, that we doe professe touching the humanity of our Saviour Christ, and make Christ indeed to be no Christ at all.

How Christ may be truely said to be every where. Bellar. de imag. Christi. l. 3. c. 16.

Coloss. 2. 9.

Bonavent. l. 3 sent. dist. 29 q. 2.

In what sense the manhood of Christ may bee said to bee every where.

Bellar. de imag. l. 3. c. 12.

Secondly, The Angell confirmeth his assertion of Christs not being in his grave, by a sufficient reason; For he is risen, for if he had said, But he is risen, (as Saint Luke saith it) it had beene a further affirmation of his Resurrection; but saying, For he is risen, it is likewise a confirmation of his former assertion, He is not here: And the reason is naturall, and in nature it is unanswerable: He is risen, and gone to another place, therefore he cannot be here, in this place; he is alive on Earth, and therefore not dead here in the graue: And therefore, Why seeke ye the living among the dead? why seeke you Christ where he is not? A doctrine surely to be well observed, Not to looke for Christ where he is not,

2 By way of confirmation. Luke 24. 6.

Presence of Christ two-fold.

either { 1. In respect of his spirituall presence, or? 2. In respect of his corporall presence. } For

First, Touching his spirituall presence, we know where hers, In sinu matris Ecclesiæ. In the bosome of our Mother the Church; For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middest of them; And therefore, If thus we would finde Christ, let us not with Ioseph and Mary seeke him among our Kinsmen, and Acquaintance, and worldly Friends; Nam quomodo, O bone Iesu, inter cognatos meos te inveniam, qui inter tuos minime es inventus? For how is it possible, O sweete Iesu, saith Saint Bernard, that I should find thee

1 Spirituall. Gregor. moral. lib. 18 cap. 15. Matth. 18. 20. Luke 2. 44.

That Christ is no where to be found but in the Church thee among my Kindred, when thy Mother could not finde thee among thine owne Kinſmen? (and I would to God, all the Bernards of our time would thinke on this,) but let us with the Church in the Canticles, follow the foote-ſteppes of the Flockes unto the Tents of the Shepheards, that is, Veſtigia fidelium ad ſedes doctorum, The foote-ſteps of the faithfull to the ſeats of the Doctors and Teachers of Ieſus Chriſt; There he was found by his Mother, and there he is ſtill to be found of his Children, And Lyra ad loc. cant. 1. 8.

2 Corporall. Thus Chriſt is no where corporally but in Heaven. Act. 3. 21.

Secondly, For his corporall preſence, we know where he is, ſitting at the right hand of God in Heaven, not in Earth; for the Heavens muſt containe him untill the reſtitution of all things; Indeed Mary Magdalen, and the reſt of theſe Women here, thought him to be in his grave; but as yet he had not aſcended into Heaven, and they knew not what was become of him: And therefore their ignorance may be excuſed, for ſeeking Chriſt where he was not; but we know where he is, and therefore our negligence and prepoſterouſneſſe muſt needes be condemned, and our ſelues ſhall be found void of all excuſe, Si quæramus in tumulo, quem adorare debemus in cœlo, If we ſeeke him not, where he is, and not ſtill looke for him, where he is not; For the Angell tells them plainely, hee is not here, for he is riſen, and gone away from hence, Et ſi non creditis oraculo, credite oculo, and if you will not beleeve my words, beleeve your owne eyes, come, ſee the place, where the Lord lay: and therefore either this heavenly Angell wanted ſuttlety, or the tender Church, as yet, wanted capacity, to conceive how there could be, corpus quantum ſine modo quantitativo, a body without a place, and that, a place proportionable to the body; or elſe the Angell would never have ſaid he is not here, behold the place where he lay; for they might reply, his body is every where, tyed to no place, and therefore he may be there though he is riſen, but the Angell knew, that, when God was cloathed with our fleſh, the humane nature with all her properties was ſo aſſumed as not to be drowned or deſtroyed by the Deity.

Mat. 24. 26.

Aug. de tempore Serm. 133.

The Angels want no ſuttlety.

What the women might replie to the Angell if the doctrine of the ubiquitiſts were true.

Indeed Eutiches, as I ſhewed you before, confounded the natures, the Monotholites denied the wills, and our Germane Ubiquitiſts doe evert the properties; but that great and Oecumenicall Councell of Calcedon demonſtrated a two-fold nature in Chriſt by his two-fold will againſt the Eutichians, and the ſucceeding Doctors concluded a two-fold will from his two-fold nature againſt the Monotholites; becauſe the argument holdeth good from the eſſence unto the eſſentiall properties: and therefore why may it not be as lawfull for us from the verity of Chriſt his body, to inferre a certaine poſition of place; quia dans proprietates dat naturam, & tollens naturam tollit proprietates; becauſe the eſſentiall properties can never be divorced from that nature, from whence they doe ſpring and are emergent, without the diſſolution of the ſame nature, as Luther himſelfe confeſſeth. But the Church of Rome cries downe the ubiquity of the body of Chriſt, and yet in the interim they never thinke of their owne monſtrous aſſertions at home; O Hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beame out of thine owne eye, and then thou ſhalt diſcerne more plainely the moates that are in thy neighbours eye; for I doe much doubt, whether that tenent of tranſubſtantiation or this of ubiquity hath the more concomitant abſurdities iſſuing from it and depending upon it; for, not to digreſſe, I demand about the placing of Chriſt his body in the hoſt.

The Eutychians how confuted.

Monotholits how confuted.

The abſurdities of tranſubſtantiation.

First, How the ſame can be there preſent, without the juſt quantity of a body.

Vnanſwerable quares.

Secondly, How the body of Chriſt can be caſt into a mould, of a farre leſſer quantity, then it had in the firſt embryo of his conception.

Thirdly, How the body of Chriſt can be there without the mutation or ceaſing of the corporall place and iuſt quantitie, that it hath in Heaven.

Fourthly, How at once, and at the ſelfe ſame time, the ſelfe ſame body can repleniſh divers millions of places.

I beleeve that, has recitaſſe eſt confutaſſe, to relate theſe opinions is to confute them, becauſe they carry their confutation in their faces; for it is impoſſible sible to confirme that consequent, that Christ might bee risen, and yet be here, to be in heaven above and yet to be in the Eucharist, and that, by the acquisition of a new place without the deperdition of his former place: and therefore Bellarmine observing these absurdities, deviseth a new distinction, and tells us, there is a conversio productiva & adductiva, the first produceth a new existence, and this onely a new place; so the body of Christ, saith this great Cardinall, is not produced a new out of the bread, but acquireth a new place: and therefore Sixtus Quintus was much offended, that so great a Master of controversies should endeavour to bring in a naked translocation in stead of their anciently received transubstantiation: but Bellarm. de Euchar. l.3 c.18.

Sixtus Quintus offended with Bellarmine.

Our Saviour tells us, (and I cannot here omit it,) That there should arise false Prophets, and they should say unto you, Loe here is Christ, or loe there is Christ; but he adviseth us to beleeve it not: And surely we have many such false and deceitfull Prophets, even all the patrones of transubstantiation, that teach us to seeke for Christ where he is not; for I doe assure my selfe, (as Master Doctor Sheldon hath most learnedly and largely proved) that the prediction of Christ, concerning the practise of those pseudochristians, whereof he speaketh, Mat. 24.26. saying, that they should say unto us; behold, he is in the secrets, is principally to be understood of these men; For Math.24. 26.

Looke Doctor Sheldon in a Sermon preached before the King, intituled, Christ sitting on his throne and not in popish secrets, where this is largely handled

Although divers of the ancient interpreters, as Origen, Saint Augustine, Aquinas, and others, doe expound those words of Christ mystically, of the private conventicles of hereticks, that doe challenge unto themselves only the spirituall presence of Christ, and I confesse this to be true; yet I say, that this is not all the truth, nor yet the chiefest intention of our Saviour Christ: and it is no marvell, that the Fathers attained not unto the full meaning of our Saviours words; because, every prophesie is as a riddle or a booke seale'd up, hard to be interpreted untill it be fulfilled as Irenæus saith, contra hæres. l.4. c.43. but I say, that Christ forewarneth us to take heed of such, as would pretend to teach him, the true Christ, to be personally present in most hidden and secret places, wherein I beseech you to observe these three particulars.

Aug. l de unit eccl. cap 7. Aquinas in cat sup. Mat. c 24.

Three things observable.

First, that I say, Christ forewarneth us to take heed of such as pretend to teach the true Christ; for he saith, that these false prophets shall prevaile so farre in their perswasions, as that the very elect shall be in danger to be seduced by their subtilties; and therefore this doth plainely prove to me, that they shall not deny the true Christ, nor pretend to preach any other Christ (for if they did so, the elect might be said to be more in danger of persecution then seduction) but that they should with lying arguments, out of Christs own words, and in Christ his owne name (as they will professe in the latter day) teach and seeke to prove him, the true Christ, to be in secrets, that is, in those places, where he is not.

1. That Christ warneth us to beware of them that would seeme to teach the true Christ.

Secondly, that I say, Christ forwarneth us to beware of such as teach him, the true Christ, to be personally and corporally present in those secret places, wherein they avouch him to be; for Christ bidding us, not to beleeve that he is in such secrets, setteth downe these two reasons to shew why we should not beleeve it.

2. That Christ warneth us to beware of them that teach his bodily presence any where, but in Heaven.

First, because that as the lightning commeth from the East and shineth unto the West, so shall the comming of the sonne of man be; which is all one as if he had said; when they shall tell you, that I am personally present in any place, beleeve it not; because I shall never come personally (spiritually I doe every day) untill I come as a lightning, that is, suddenly, gloriously, manifestly, which shall be his comming to judgement.

That Christ useth two speciall reasons to prove that he will never come bodily to any secrets, i'll the day of judgement.

Secondly, because that wheresoever the body is, thither will the Eagles be gathered together; for though Origen senseth the body, to be the Church, the Eagles to be the Doctors, and their gathering together, to be their harmonious and joynt-consent in truth; and though Saint Hierome, Theophylact and others, doe by the body conceive Christ crucified, by the Eagles all the Saints, and by their gathering together, the applying of the merits of his passion, unto our soules; yet

Origen tract 30. in Matth.

Hieron in Matth. 3. and Theophilact. in Matth. 24.

Saint Chrysostome, Stella, Ferus, and Maldonate, and many more, even of our Iesuites themselves doe interpret these words, of Christ his comming to judgement, and they say that the body signifieth the personall presence of Christ. the Eagels the Saints, and their gathering together the meeting of him in judgement: and therefore by this reason, Christ doth plainly intimate, that they should not looke, nor beleeve any personall presence of him in any secret places; because he is that body, or that carkeise, as both Theophilact and Beza use the word, unto whom all the Saints shall be visibly gathered together; and he at no time comes bodily unto them, untill they likewise come, and be gathered unto him.

And in both these reasons (as you see) he speaketh of a personall presence of himselfe, publikely shewed; and in this last reason he nameth his body or carkeise; and therefore in his predictions, he forwarneth us to beleeve not them, which teach any personall or bodily presence of him in any secrets; for otherwise it had beene to no purpose, to bring these reasons of his not comming bodily, untill he should visibly come to judgement, to dissuade us from beleeving any his spirituall comming; for his not comming personally till the day of judgement, doth no way prove, but he may, as he doth, come spiritually every day to be present with his Saints in many secrets; but his not comming personally till then is a sufficient reason, to dissuade us from beleeving any personall comming of him in secrets. And 3 That Christ willeth us to beware of them that teach him to be bodily present in many places at once.

Thirdly, that I say, Christ forewarneth us to take heed of such as teach him, the true Christ, to be thus personally present, in many secret, unknowne places, all at once; for the very word, which our Saviour useth, to expresse the subtilties of these false prophets, doth prove as much; for

First, he sheweth us, that they shall say, he is ἐν τοῖς ταμείοις, in secrets, which is a word that signifieth, a most secret, unknowne place, or a little cupboord where they use to set their bread; and so the word, used to expresse the same in the vulgar Latine, in penetralibus, doth signifie the most inward, and most hidden place of any place.

Secondly, he sheweth us, that those false prophets should tell us, that the true Christ is not onely ἐν τῷ ταμείῳ, in some one secret place, but in penetralibus, in secrets, that is, in many places, and in divers secrets all at once.

That the defenders of Transubstantiation teach all these points which Christ bad us herein to beware of.

And I say, that I could never see, how this prediction can be more properly applyed to any heretickes, old or new, then to the teachers and defenders of Transubstantiation; for

First, they perswade us to beleeve no other Christ, but onely the true Christ to be there, under the formes of bread and wine.

Secondly, they perswade us, that he is personally and bodily there, flesh, bloud, bones, and all:

Thirdly, they teach, that he is there in so secret, hidden and invisible manner, as that it can no wayes, by any humane sense be conceived, but onely by a divine faith to be beleeved: And I am sure no false prophets in the world could, or ever can teach a more mysticall and secret presence of Christ personally and bodily, then this manner is; and

Fourthly, they teach, that he is thus wholly and hiddenly in many thousand places all at once, even whersoever any bread in the Masse is consecrated, there is Christ personally in all such secrets, according to their ancient distich;

A blasphemous distich.

Constat in altari, carnem de pane creari;
Hic panis Deus est, qui negat hoc, reus est:
The bread on th'altar, as we say, is turned by the Priest his breath
To be Christs flesh; who ever saith nay, is guilty of his death.

And therefore seeing the prediction of Christ, concerning the practise of the false apostles, is so plainely seene to be fully accomplished in these deceived and deceitfull teachers, I advise all men to follow our Saviours counsell, beleeve them not, beleeve them not; for, though we doe acknowledge, a true, reall, sacramentall presence of Christ; effectually and really working, by

by a true and lively faith in all the worthy receivers of that blessed bread; because, as the Angels are said truly and really to be, not only where they diffinitively are, but also where they do effectually work, and as the Sun is said truly and really to be, not onely where he is locally fixed in heaven, but also where it doth virtually shine, and work here on earth; so the body of Christ may be said to be truly and really, not only in the heavens, where it is locally present, but also here in the sacred mysteries, where he effectually worketh in all the worthy receivers of the same; yet for any other reall bodily presence of Christ in the bread and wine, we utterly deny, he is not here; for the same reason that the Angell useth to prove, he was not in his grave, because he was risen, and gone to another place; so we say, he is not here, because we know he is in heaven, where he sitteth on the right hand of God, and from thence he will not come personally into any hidden and secret place, untill he comes apparently, like the lightning that commeth from the East, and suddenly shineth unto the West, as himselfe doth testifie.

How the body of of Christ, may be said to be truly and really in the Sacrament.

And so much for the confirmation of this Angels assertion, that Christ was not there, in the grave, because he was risen, and gone to another place, and so likewise of my application and inference thereupon, that we are not to believe Christ to be in the secret places of bread and wine, because he is ascended to another place, where he sitteth on the right hand of God: He that hath eares to heare let him heare; for here I do professe before almighty God, and before his Sonne Iesus Christ, that in all my poore reading (which I desired might be so much as my time and ability would give me leave) I did never find a point more contrary to the truth, more derogatory to the honour of God, more destroying the nature of Christ, and more dangerous unto men, in all the writings of our adversaries, than is this incredible and impossible point of Transubstantiation: loe, I have told you what I believe.

What the Author thinketh of transubstantiation.

And here likewise we must further note, that (as I shewed unto you before) S. Luke saith, He is not here, but he is risen; to teach us that these words are so excellently couched by the Evangelist, as they might serve, both for a confirmation of his former speech, he is not here, and also for an assertion and declaration of the chiefest matter that the Angell intended to instruct these women in, that is, the resurrection of Christ, for he is risen.

Chap. IV.

That the Messias was to rise againe, and why: Certaine objections answered: and why he was to rise againe the third day.

THirdly, the Angell doth not onely affirme, but he doth also illustrate and confirme this assertion of Christ his resurrection, by two infallible arguments.

3 By way of illustration, two wayes.

First, à priori, from those typicall instructions, and Prophetical predictions, which fore-shewed that the Messias must rise againe.

1 Way.

Secondly, à posteriori, from those cleare demonstrations that do prove this Christ to have risen againe.

For the first, he saith, that Christ was risen as he said, that is, formerly by his Prophets, and lately by himselfe; for the resurrection of Christ was not onely prefigured by Adams sleepe, by Isaacs laying upon the Altar, by Iosephs imprisonment, by Sampsons breaking of the gates of Gaza, and such like, but in a more plaine and speciall manner, it was propheried and foretold by Moses, David and others of the Prophets, which spake of the resurrection of Christ, and so likewise by our Saviour Christ himselfe.

Three speciall reasons shewing why Christ was to rise againe. First, to manifest Satans conquell.

And the reason, why the Messias was to rise againe, is specially three-fold.

First, in respect of Satan, that his subjection might be manifested; for he had said, that the Prince of this world was to be cast forth, and this Prince was conquered conquered at his passion, but this conquest was manifested at his resurrection.

Secondly, to assure us of our deliverance.

Secondly, in respect of us men, that we might be assured of our deliverance from sin and Satan, and of our justification before God, by the vertue and power of his passion; for if Christ be not risen from the dead, our faith is vaine, our hope is vaine, our religion is vaine, and we are of all men most miserable; for in this onely point consisteth the greatest difference betwixt us and the Iewes, and all other unbelieving Gentiles; Nam Christum esse mortuum humana ratio concedit, for they will yeeld that Christ was dead, humane reason might prove that unto us, sed eum esse suscitatum ex mortuis, omnem fidem rationis excedit, but that he should rise againe from the dead, they cannot think, they will not believe, because this exceeds the reach of reason: and therefore S. Ambrose saith, that although sibi non resurgeret rationem non haberet, he had no reason to rise in respect of himself, yet there was great reason that he should rise for the confirmation of our faith; and so S. Paul saith, that he rose againe for our justification, not that any part of the price of our redemption was unpaid at his passion, but that the evidence of our deliverance was not manifested untill his resurrection; for as he died to deliver us, so he rose againe to shew that he had delivered us.

Amb. l. 24. c. 26. in Iob.

Rom. 4. 25.

Thirdly, to shew himselfe a most victorious conqueror of all his enemies.

Thirdly, in respect of himselfe, that he might shew himselfe a victorious conqueror of all his enemies, and a trampler of hell, sin, and Satan under his feet, as of those that could detaine him no longer in their hands, and that he might shew himselfe to be the Sonne of God, coequall and coeternall unto his Father; for as he was to declare himselfe truly to be a son of man, by yeelding unto death; so he was to declare himself mightily to be the Sonne of God, by the resurrection from the dead; and as he should be led (by Esayas Prophecie) as a sheepe to the slaughter, when he was to be crucified; so he should come from the spoile (by Iacobs Prophecie) as a lions whelpe, when he was to rise from the dead: and therefore S. Bernard saith, that he, Qui agnus exiterat in passione, factus est leo in resurrectione, which stood as a lambe at his passion, to take away the sinne of the world, became a lion at his resurrection, to spoile all principalities and powers, and to make an open shew of them.

Esay 53.

Gen. 49. 9.

Col. 2. 15.

Obiect. But here it may be some will say, doth resurrection from the dead declare a man to have conquered death, hell and Satan, and prove him to be the eternall and omnipotent Sonne of God? Why then the widowes sonne of Sarepta, the sonne of the Shunamite, the daughter of Iairus, the widowes sonne of Naim, Lazarus, and all that did rise with Christ and appeared to their friends in Ierusalem, may be said to be the conquerours of death, and the eternall sonnes of God; but this is most absurd; and therefore resurrection from the dead is no sufficient argument to prove the conquest of our enemies, and the divine omnipotency of our Saviour Christ.

1 King. 17. 22. Mark 5. 41. Luke 7. 14. Iohn 11.

Sol. I answer, Quòd hi resurrexerunt mortui, iterum morituri, that these men rose, when they were dead, to die againe, after they were raised; but Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more, (saith the Apostle) death hath no more dominion over him.

Rom. 6. 8.

That all which were raised from death but Christ, were raised by others, and died againe.

Secondly, I say, that all those were raised virtute aliorum, by the vertue and power of others, as the widowes sonne of Sarepta was raised by Elias, the Shunamites sonne by Elizaus, and they did it potestate precaria, non propria, by a power obtained by prayer, not proper in themselves; a power non innata, sed data desuper, not their own naturally, but supernaturally given them from above; and therefore, though in their life time they raised others, yet being dead, they could not raise themselves; but our Saviour Christ did not only raise others in his life time, but also being dead, laid in his grave, pressed with stones, sealed by the Priests, watched by the souldiers, and sought to be detained by all the power of darknesse, yet he, virtute propria, ut victor, prodijt de sepultura, as a most invincible conquerour, by his own proper power, raised himselfe to life, and by the strength of his own arme, he caused all things to make way unto himselfe: And this the Prophet Esay (in the person of Christ) clearly expresseth, saying, I have troden the wine-presse wine-presse alone, and of the people there was none with me; and I looked and there was none to helpe: and I wondered that there was none to uphold: and therefore mine owne arme brought salvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me; for as no man could take away his life from him, but he laid it downe himselfe, as a man layeth down his garments; so, though there was none to helpe him, yet was it impossible, that any, or all his enemies should keepe away his life from him; for he had equall power to take it up, as he had to lay it downe at his pleasure: and therefore S. Peter saith, that he loosed the sorrowes of death, because it was impossible that he should be holden of it.

That Christ raised himselfe from the dead. Bern. de resur. Christ. Esay 63. 3. 5.

Acts 2.24. Acts 5.30. Acts 2.24. Cap.4.10. Eph 1.20. Rom.8.11.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that the God of our Fathers is said to have raised up Iesus from the dead; and so in many places the suscitation and resurrection of Christ is ascribed unto the Father: and therefore Christ did not raise himselfe.

Sol. I answer, that this doth not shew he raised not himself; but it sheweth that the resurrection of the manhood of Christ is the indivisible work of the blessed Trinity essentially, common to all the three persons; for as the Father raised him, so he raised himselfe, for (whatsoever the Father doth, I do, saith Christ) and so the Holy Ghost raised him: and therefore this rather confirmeth the truth of his resurrection, by his own power & vertue, than any waies seem to infringe the same.

Christ to rise the third day.

Neither was it only propheſied, that he should rise againe from the dead, but it was also more particularly shewed, that he should rise againe the third day; for the Prophet Hosea speaking of our Saviour Christ, saith, After two dayes he will revive us, and in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his presence; and Christ himselfe more plainly saith, that as Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the whales belly, so should the Sonne of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Hos.6.2. Mat.12.40.

That God foreshewed Christ should rise againe the third day two wayes.

And the reason why he was so directly to rise againe the third day, may be said to be, to fulfill all predictions, that were fore-spoken concerning him, that so the Scriptures might be fulfilled, as our Saviour himselfe doth testifie: and so the Angell said, that he was risen, as he said; and he said that he should rise againe the third day: And this he said,

1 Formerly in the old Testament.
2 Lately in the new Testament.

1 In the old Testament.

First, by his Prophet Hosea he said in plaine termes, that in the third day he would raise us up, that is, his Sonne united to us, or els our flesh assumed by his Son: but because as many of us do now heare the Sermon and hate the Preacher, praise his words, and never practise the matter, so did the Iewes then, heare the Prophesies, but kill the Prophets, retained the words, but never believed the true substance of the matter: therefore God did not only by these dead letters, but also by most lively figures, expresly shew, that the Messias which should be slaine, should in the third day be raised up; for

What the Iewes did.

Typicall testimonies shewing that Christ should rise againe the third day.

1 Isaac going with his Father to be sacrificed, as a true type of that eternall Priest, which was sacrificed for all men, until the third day was no better than a dead man; but at the third day he was revived, restored, & as it were raised again frō the dead.

2 Ioseph being sold to Egypt, and sent by God to be a Ruler next under Pharaoh, (as Christ is under God his Father) that he might be a type of this eternall King, untill the third yeare was no better than a dead man, but in the third yeare he was delivered and made governour over all the land of Egypt.

Gen 22 4. Gen.41.1.

3 Ionas being sent into the land of Ninive, that he might be a type of that great Prophet which the Lord our God had promised to raise unto us out of our brethren, for three dayes was no better than a dead man, lying all that while in the whales belly; but after three dayes he was delivered out of the belly of hell, and vomited out upon the dry land.

Ionas 2.2 10.

All these fore-told the resurrection of Christ; and therefore Christ, to fulfill all these, did rise againe the third day.

2 In the new Testament. Christ himselfe shewed, that he should rise againe the third day.

Secondly, neither did these preach lowder unto the Iewes, that the Messias which was to come should rise againe the third day, than Christ himselfe did unto his his Apoſtles, that he would riſe againe the third day; for as ſoone as ever Saint Peter, in the name of them all, had confeſt that he was the Chriſt the Sonne of the living God, he did preſently profeſſe unto him and the reſt, how he muſt be killed and raiſed againe the third day: and therefore to performe his owne words ſpoken by himſelfe, aſwell as his Fathers words ſpoken by the Prophets; he would be mindfull of his promiſe, and riſe againe the third day; and this the Angels doe excellently note, when they ſaid unto the women, Remember how he ſpake unto you, while he was yet in Galile, ſaying, The Sonne of man muſt be delivered into the hands of ſinfull men, and be crucified, and the third day riſe againe.

Luke 24.6.

A conſolation for us.

An exceeding comfort unto us all, that Chriſt will ever performe his word, fulfill his promiſe, and obſerve his time to a minute; for he is not as man that he ſhould lie; and therefore we ſhould ever give credence unto his words, for he will performe them all in their appointed times.

Ob. But here it may be demaunded, why God appointed and decreed this third day to be the definitive and ſet time of his reſurrection, rather than the ſecond, fourth, or fift, or any other day before or after?

That we are not curiouſly to ſearch the reaſon of Gods free actions.

Sol. To this I anſwer, that as I have often ſaid, God is liberrimus agens, a moſt free worker of his owne affaires, and It is not for us to know the times and the ſeaſons which the Father hath kept in his owne power; but as he doth whatſoever pleaſeth him, ſo he doth them howſoever and whenſoever it pleaſeth him.

Secondly, I ſay that we find very excellent reaſons (which it pleaſed God to reveale unto us) why Chriſt raiſed himſelfe the third day, that is,

Chriſt raiſed himſelfe the third day in three reſpects.

1 In reſpect of his enemies.
2 In reſpect of his Diſciples.
3 In reſpect of all believers.
} For

1 Of his enemies.

Firſt, his enemies, both in reſpect of the predictions of the Prophets, and the ſpeeches of Chriſt himſelfe knew, that the Meſſias ſhould riſe againe the third day: and therefore they hired ſouldiers, and appointed a guard to watch, and to keep the ſepulcher, that upon that day this Ieſus ſhould not riſe, leaſt, if he did, he might be then thought to be the Meſſias indeed: and therefore upon that day he did riſe, that his enemies might be convicted by the teſtimony of their own watchmen, and be brought therefore, either to confeſſe their faults, or to remaine without excuſe, if they knowing the truth, would notwithſtanding ſeek (as they did) to conceale and ſuppreſſe the truth.

Tertul. adverſ Iudæos. c. 13.

2 Of his diſciples.

Secondly, his friends and diſciples, upon the fore-ſaid apprehenſions, did expect his reſurrection upon this third day; for ſo the two diſciples travelling towards Emaus, after they had ſaid many things concerning him, and that they truſted it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael, do add this, as a moſt ſpeciall obſervation, beſides all the reſt, that to day is the third day ſince theſe things were done: and therefore to confirm their weak faith, and to comfort their diſconſolate ſoules, he did riſe againe the third day.

Chryſ. hom. 9. in Mat.

Luke 24 21.

3 Of all Chriſtians.

Thirdly, We were all to reape and to receive the fruits and benefits of his reſurrection: and therefore chiefly (as he roſe) ſo he roſe the third day in reſpect of us all, that is, to confirme our faith, and that eſpecially in theſe foure reſpects.

The reſurrection of Chriſt the third day confirmeth our faith in foure reſpects.

viz. 1 Touching the quality of his perſon.
2 Touching the certainty of his reſurrection.
3 Touching the manner of our reſtauration.
4 Touching the manifeſtation of our ſtate and condition.
} For

1 Reſpect. How the third day was the fitteſt time for Chriſt to riſe in reſpect of the perſon of Chriſt.

Firſt, our Saviour Chriſt conſiſted both of a divine and a humane nature; humane, that he might die, and divine, that he might riſe again; and to ſhew his death, it was requiſite that he ſhould riſe no ſooner than the third day; becauſe in leſſe time than that, a man cannot well be ſaid to be dead, but may be ſuſpected to be in a ſwound, or in a fit of an apoplexie, or ſome other fained fit; and in reſpect of the divine nature, it was impoſſible that he ſhould be held of death any longer than three dayes; dayes; for it is the opinion of moſt, grounded upon experience, that in all dead carkaſſes, and a wounded body eſpecially, putrefaction and corruption beginneth the third day; ſo Martha ſaith of Lazarus, He hath been dead foure dayes, and he ſtinketh; then no doubt but he began to ſtink the third day; but the humane nature of our Saviour Chriſt, in reſpect of its hypoſtaticall union with the Deity, even then, when it lay in the grave, could not ſee, much leſſe feele corruption, as the Prophet David ſheweth: therefore it was impoſſible (ſaith S. Peter) that he ſhould be holden by the paines of death, that is, be ſtayed ſo long by death, untill putrefaction or other like penalties and conſequences of death had ſeized upon him; and therefore as in reſpect of his humane nature, it was not convenient he ſhould riſe any ſooner; ſo in reſpect of his divine nature, it was impoſſible he ſhould be ſtaid any longer than three dayes.

Putrefaction, when it beginneth in a dead carkaſſe

Pſal. 16. 11. Acts 2. 24.

Secondly, our Saviour was to ſhew both the verity of his death, and the certainty of his reſurrection; but if he had riſen ſooner than the third day, the verity of his death might be called into queſtion; and if he had promiſed after a long time to have raiſed himſelfe againe, (as Mahomet ſaid, that after eight hundred yeares he would revive and reviſit his Sarazens againe) then might the falſhood thereof lurk in the length of time; and indeed if he had ſtaid in his grave any whit longer than he did, it might be eaſily objected, and with ſome probability, by his adverſaries, that there was no certainty of his reſurrection, whether it was he that was crucified that had raiſed himſelfe, or ſome other that appeared in his name, or whether he had raiſed the ſame body that was buried, or had aſſumed ſome other body, like unto the ſame; becauſe the countenance of a dead body is ſoone changed, and our memory and knowledge of ſuch is ſoone ſtupified, as we ſee, theſe three dayes time made moſt of them, that they knew him not, prima facie, upon the firſt ſight: therefore Chriſt to ſhew the verity of his death, ſtayed while the third day, and he would ſtay no longer, to ſhew the certainty of his reſurrection.

2 Reſpect. Chriſt ſtayed while the third day, to ſhew the verity of his death, and no longer, to ſhew the certainty of his reſurrection.

Thirdly, Chriſt in our redemption was to parallell our creation, and in many things this ſecond Adam was to reſemble the firſt Adam; for S. Paul, ſpeaking of Gods œconomie and diſpenſation of his grace unto us, ſheweth, how Almighty God purpoſing to redeem mankind, did ſo ſweetly diſpoſe of the maner of our redemption, that as by man came death, ſo by man came the reſurrection from the dead; and ſo a due proportion and reſemblance ſhould be in many things betwixt the firſt and ſecond Adam.

3 Reſpect. Chriſt roſe the third day, that our redemption might parallell our creation.

But we find that the firſt Adam was formed out of the earth, as from a ſole mother without any Father, by the Word of God, and was both created and fallen in the ſixt day, the day before the Sabbath; therefore the Word God in the ſixt age of the world, was made the ſecond Adam, of a ſole mother, without a father; and in the ſixt day of the week, the ſame day wherein Adam was created and tranſgreſſed, and about the ſame houre that the firſt Adam ſinned by eating the fruit of the forbidden tree, was this ſecond Adam crucified upon a tree, and in the ſame place (as ſome do think) wherein the firſt Adam was buried; and as the Father, after his creation, reſted upon the Sabbath; ſo Chriſt after our purchaſe and redemption, reſted in his grave all the Sabbath, and then, as his Father upon the firſt day of the weeke had begun the world; ſo Chriſt upon the firſt day of the weeke did begin to renew the world, and cauſed, as Lactantius ſaith,

Amb. l. 5. Ep. 19.

Omnia cum domino dona redire ſuo.

All graces to be renewed, all men that believed in him to be revived, and now to begin againe to live a new life unto God with him.

And this was prefigured in the Law, where Moſes ſheweth, that the ſheafe of their firſt fruits was to be brought unto the Prieſt, and the Prieſt was to wave the ſame before the Lord, on the morrow after the Sabbath, which was the Sabbath of the Paſſeover; to note unto us, that Chriſt which is the true firſt fruits that is offered unto God for us all, was to be waved and raiſed up the immediate morrow after the Paſſeover, that, as Adam was created the laſt day, and then dyed, and ſo

Levit. 23. 11.

Verſ. 15.

begat Ecclesiam morientium, a congregation of sinners, all subject unto death; so Christ the first day of the week was raised up, and lives for ever, to beget Ecclesiam resurgentium, a congregation of believers, that through him might live to God and with God for ever.

4 Respect. Christ rose the third day to be a patterne of our condition.

Fourthly, Christ by his example was to set down a patterne and a sampler of our state and condition: and we are all to learne of him, and to do as he did, if we desire to be happy where he is; but here we see Christ had his three dayes and no more; and therefore we must have the same three dayes, and the same like to his, if we would be Christians like to him.

The three dayes of Christ, and of all Christians.

Now these three dayes of Christ were thus distinguished; the first day was called the day of preparation, and this was the day of his Passion; the second day was called the Sabbath, and this was the day of his rest; and the third was called the first day of the week, and this was the day of his resurrection; and so must our three dayes beare equipage and prove to be like his, if we would be his.

The first day is a day of Passion.

The first is a day of preparation, a day of passion, a day of clouds and darkenesse, wherein with strong cries, and teares, and prayers, we must commend our selves unto the tuition and protection of God; for in this day we must strive and struggle against sin and Satan; we must suffer all their bitter darts against us, and we must fight against them till we die; and though this be a day of sorrow, yet we have some comfort in this day; for as this his first day was the shortest of all his three dayes; so is our life but a day; Give us this day our daily bread; and this day is but a span long, the shortest time that may be, like unto a dreame, or a tale that is told: and therefore we should be the more ready and willing to beare our crosse, because the time of our suffering is but very short.

Our suffering is but short.

The second day is a day of rest.

The second is a day of rest in our graves, where our flesh shall rest in hope, to be raised up at the last day. And

The third day is a day of resurrection

The third is a day of resurrection unto glory, the first day of the week, and the first beginning of a never-dying world.

But as Christ could not have risen in glory, had he not rested in hope, neither could he have rested in hope, had he not suffered and died in faith; so cannot we attaine unto a joyfull resurrection upon our third day, unlesse we rest in hope in our second day, neither can we rest in hope in our graves the second day, unlesse we do valiantly fight and suffer unto death on the first day; for this is the order that Christ took, and the disciple is not above his Master: and therefore if any bid us come down from the crosse, let us stop our eares, like the cockatrice, and let us bide on still with Iesus, that so we may rest and rise with Iesus.

Our Saviours order.

And so you see how, and why, our Saviour Christ was to rise againe the third day.

Ob. But here it may be some will say (as they qui disputare mallent quam credere, which had rather dispute about his resurrection, than believe in his resurrection) that he was not only to rise the third day, but also to remaine three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth; and yet we find that he was buried by Ioseph and Nicodemus about three houres before Sun-set on Good-friday, and he rose againe about foure or five a clock on Sunday morning, which maketh not in all above thirty six, or thirty eight houres, or not above forty houres, if we cast it to the highest account: and therefore how could he be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth?

How Christ remained three dayes in his grave

Sol. To this Leo answereth, that Christ, lest his long absence should too much perplexe the afflicted minds of his disciples, Denuntiatam tridui moram tum mira celeritate breviavit, &c. Did so exceedingly shorten the fore-spoken three dayes space, that while the last part of the first day, and the first part of the last day is numbred with the second day, the time is only shortned, but the number of the dayes is not diminished; and so S. Augustine saith, that the last part of the first day is taken for the whole day, and so likewise the first part of the last day is taken for the whole day; and it is said that within the space of three dayes he should rise againe, that is, before three dayes should passe over.

Leo Ser. 1. de resurrect.

Object.

Ob. But then, though this taking of part for the whole, might be ſufficient to prove his being three dayes in the earth; yet this is not ſufficient to ſhew how he was three nights as well as three dayes in his grave; for our Saviour ſaith, He muſt be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth, whereas by this reckoning we find but two nights in all: and therefore, paſſing by the ſeverall anſwers of ſundry learned men, to ſay what I think,

Mat 12.40.

Sol. I anſwer, that twelve houres was the Iewes perfect day, according to that ſaying of Chriſt, Are there not twelve houres in the day? And the very ſame twelve houres, in the oppoſite Region of the heavens, is a perfect night; and we find that Chriſt remained in his grave three whole twelve houres, call it how you will: and therefore thus he may be truly ſaid to be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth; or els, Ioh 11.9. How Chriſt remained three dayes and three nights in his grave.

I ſay ſecondly, that if we meaſure the time according to Gods meaſure of a day in the beginning, that is, from the beginning of the Evening, untill the Evening returned againe, as the evening and the morning was the firſt day, that is, the evening of the night, and the morning of the day, was the firſt day, then I ſay, that under theſe parts of the firſt and laſt day, muſt be (as there in Moſes it is) underſtood the nights alſo; for as Moſes reckoneth the evening and the morning of the day, for the day and night; ſo muſt we here underſtand theſe three dayes, for three dayes and three nights; and ſo Chriſt remained three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth.

There are three ſorts of dayes. 1 Dies naturalis. 2 Dies artificialis. 3 Dies civilis, vel dies operis. Gen 1.5.

And thus we ſee both by types and the predictions of the Prophets, and by the aſſertion of Chriſt himſelfe, that the Meſſias and Saviour of the world ſhould be ſlaine, and muſt riſe againe the third day.

CHAP. V.

Of the Iewes reaſons why they believe not Ieſus the Sonne of Mary to be the Meſſias, and why they thinke he raiſed not himſelfe from the grave.

SEcondly, for the confirmation of this point à poſteriori, from the apparent proofe of the fulfilling of the ſame truth in the perſon of any one that was ſlaine, and did riſe againe the third day, the queſtion is betwixt us and the Iewes; whether Ieſus the Sonne of Mary, whom they crucified and buried, and whom we preach and believe in, be the true Meſſias or not, and whether he raiſed himſelfe from his grave, yea or no.

2 Way.

The queſtion betwixt us and the Iewes.

To both theſe the Iewes anſwer no; not the Meſſias, not raiſed from the dead.

First, not the Meſſias, becauſe he came not down from the Croſſe, when he was faſt nailed unto the ſame; for if he be the King of Iſrael, (ſaid the chiefe of them, their high Prieſts and Elders of the people) Let him now come downe from the Croſſe, and we will believe in him.

The Iewes reaſon, that Chriſt is not the Meſſias. Mat. 27.42.

Ah fooliſh nation, a nation void of underſtanding, and children of your father the divell, Namq; haud tibi vultus humanus, nec vox hominum ſonat; for here you ſing the ſame ſong, and you harp upon the ſame ſtring as he did; If thou beeſt the Sonne of God, caſt thy ſelfe downeward, ſaith the divell; and if he be the King of Iſrael, let him come down from the Croſſe, ſay theſe children of the divell: ſo you ſee the one would have him to deſcend from the Temple, the other from the Croſſe; the one from ſerving God, the other from ſuffering for man, and both to deſcend, whereas God made man to aſcend.

Former reaſon anſwered. Mat. 4.6.

Chryſ. hom de cruce

Os homini ſublime dedit cœlumq; tueri
Iuſſit.——

Ovid Metam. l. 1.

And of all his creatures, he made him only ſtraight, to look up towards heaven, and bids men alwaies to have ſurſum corda, their hearts like their heads, lifted

God made man to aſcend.

Phil. 3 10. up, their thoughts in heaven, and their converſations in heaven, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: And therefore whenſoever we are inticed to deſcend from the height of Gods ſervice, or ſuffering upon our Croſſe, and to ſettle our affections here upon the baſe things of this world, let us know, it is the voice of Satan, not of God.

Mat. 27. 42. I, but let him come downe, and we will believe in him, ſaith this people; and let us enjoy the pleaſures and the vanities of the earth, and we will ſerve him, ſaith the generation of this world.

Luke 16. 31. But as our Saviour ſaith unto them in another caſe, If you will not believe Moſes and the Prophets, neither will you believe though one ſhould ariſe from the dead; So S. Bernard ſaith in this caſe, if now you will not believe in him that raiſed himſelfe from the grave, you would never have believed in him, if he had then deſcended from the Croſſe; Quia plus erat de ſepulchro ſurgere, quam de cruce deſcendere, & plus mortem reſurgendo deſtruere, quam vitam deſcendendo ſervare; becauſe it was a greater matter to raiſe himſelfe from the grave, than to deſcend from the Croſſe, and it was a farre more excellent argument of invincible omnipotency, being dead, to deſtroy death, by riſing againe from the dead, than being alive, to ſave his life by deſcending from the Croſſe: And ſo I ſay to the baſe deſcending worldlings, if they will not ſtay upon the Croſſe, to ſuffer with Chriſt here, they are not worthy to be exalted to raigne with Chriſt hereafter; and if they will not believe in him, and ſerve him for the hope of the joyes of heaven, they are not worthy to be received into the number of his ſervants; becauſe ſuch men love the world more than God, and will not love God but for the worlds ſake, like unto the Woman, Quæ non maritum amat, ſed aurum mariti; which loves her husbands wealth more than her husband, or not her husband, but for his wealths ſake.

Greg. Hom. 21. in Evang.

That it was a greater matter to riſe from the dead, than to come down from the Croſſe.

Aug. de verb. Dom. Serm.

The Iewes reaſon that Chriſt raiſed not himſelfe from the grave.

Secondly, they ſay he raiſed not himſelfe from the grave, but his Diſciples came by night and ſtole him away; and if this be true, he could not be the true Meſſias.

Whether the Diſciples ſtole away Chriſt from his grave or not.

But what? his Diſciples that forſooke him, and forſware him, while he was yet alive, and could, if he would, have reſcued himſelfe out of the hands of all his enemies? Alas, poore men, durſt they now, ſilly fiſhermen, thruſt themſelves among the pikes of armed ſouldiers, to ſteale away a dead carkaſſe, that could neither helpe himſelfe nor them? No, no, they were readier to hide themſelves in graves, than to adventure to take him out of the grave: And therefore Mary Magdalen, that knew his Diſciples did not, nor durſt not take him away, thought rather, (when ſhe found him not in his tombe) that they which left him no reſt in his life, did alſo take him and toſſe him now out of his grave,

Virg. Æneid. l. 1. ——Sic multum terris jactatus & alto.

And ſo left him not, neither in life nor death; Dementia inſanabilis, ſo implacable was their rage, and ſo outragious was their malice againſt him.

Amb. in hunc locum Luc. But though ſhe was in the right, that his Diſciples did not meddle with him, yet herein ſhe was deceived, Putando Chriſtum ſublatum eſſe de monumento, when ſhe thought that the ſouldiers had removed him, (ſaith S. Ambroſe;) becauſe this victorious Lion did Sampſon-like carry away the gates of Gaza, and burſt open the doores of his ſepulcher, that his glorious Body might come forth; yet the womans weakneſſe may be excuſed, Quia cum pietate ſociatus eſt; becauſe her errour proceeded of ignorance, and was accompanied with an upright conſcience: but who can extenuate, or who will not aggravate that extreame folly and horrible impiety of this wretched and malicious people? For they not onely refuſed to receive him for their Saviour, and ſaid, Nolumus hunc regnare ſuper nos, we will have none of this man, we will have none other man but Cæſar to be our King; but they did alſo per ſecute him as a ſeducer, and crucified him as a falſe uſurper, & then buried him without honour, there were no widowes to make lamentation, nor any of his friends that durſt ſhew it; and being buried, they locked faſt his ſepulcher, Molemq́, & montes inſuper altos impoſuere mali, & theſe wicked men have preſt him down with a mighty ſtone, and they hire a band of armed ſoldiers to watch him, Iudg 16. 3.

How the High Prieſts did what poſſibly they could to hinder the reſurrection of Chriſt.

that

that he ſhould neither riſe himſelfe, nor his Diſciples come and take him away: And therefore his Diſciples that were ſo lately amazed at his paſſion, were now ſo ſtupified at this obſignation, this ſealing, and watching and warding of him, that they durſt not once paſſe out of doores to looke after his Reſurrection, untill theſe three Women, (which in reſpect of their ſexe, eſteemed themſelues more free from violence, and thereupon preſumed firſt to ſee the Sepulcher) had informed them, that this one had chas'd a thouſand, and had put all that band of men to flight.

Or if their hearts had ſerved them, to adventure ſo great a danger, and that they had recollected more courage now after his death, then ever Peter the boldeſt of them had, during his life, (which all men will ſay, is moſt unprobable, becauſe a living Dogge is better then a dead Lyon; and therefore Chriſt being alive might animate the vildeſt coward-like Thirſites, to be more valiant and adventurous for his defence, then now being dead he could doe to the moſt heroicke Achilles;) yet is it any waies likely, or could it poſſibly be, that his Diſciples ſhould come thither, breake up the Monument, tumble away that great ſtone, take up his body, beſtrip him of his winding ſheete, lay all his linnen cloathes, wherewith he was wrapped, ſo orderly by themſelues, (a ſigne they had leiſure enough, and were in no danger at all, or elſe they were very fooles, that they did not ſuddenly ſnatch him away, and take ſome other time and place to beſtrip him,) and then carry him away, never after to be ſeene or found, without the eſpyall of ſome one or other, among ſo many that attended there? Ideo mentita eſt iniquitas ſibi: But the Iewes anſwer, that as the fooliſh Virgins, (whereof our Saviour ſpeaketh) ſo theſe fooliſh and ſottiſh Souldiers, they all ſlumbred and ſlept; and then while their Argos eies were ſleeping, his Diſciples came, thoſe poore freſh-water Souldiers, and their committed charge was ſtollen away. Eccleſ. 9. 4.

But then I replie firſt, with Rhemigius out of S. Auguſt. If they all ſlept, Quomodo furtum viderunt? How can they tell his Diſciples, and not others tooke him away? Might not God take him as he did Enoch, or the Angels bury him and hide him, as they did the body of Moſes? or how can they tell who tooke him away? for they ſlept; and therefore ſurely no credit to be given unto them: If they had ſaid, We ſlept, and therefore we cannot tell what became of him, this might have had ſome likelihood of truth: but to ſay, We ſlept, and his Diſciples ſtole him away; this muſt needs be apparantly falſe. The abſurdities following the high Prieſts ſaying. 1 Abſurditie.

Secondly, If they ſlept why did the High Prieſts give them money, large money (ſaith the Text) for their negligence, and not rather puniſh them for their ſlothfulneſſe? muſt men be ſo largely rewarded for evill doing? eſpecially in ſo weighty a cauſe, as, not the loſſe of a City, or a Kingdome, but the loſſe of ſalvation to the whole race of mankind, when all depended upon this one point; for if he roſe againe, he was the Saviour of the World; if not, he was but an impoſtor: Why then would they not watch? or if not, why not ſeverely puniſhed? and no puniſhment too great for ſo great a negligence? 2 Abſurditie.

Thirdly, If they were awake, why did they hire them to ſay they were aſleepe? This may be anſwered: They knew money delivered him into their hands, and therefore they thought that money would conceale the truth from the people, for as the Poet ſaith; 3 Abſurditie

——— Quid non mortalia pectora cogit
auri ſacra fames? ——— Virg. Aneid. l. 1.

What wickedneſſe is not done for money? Theſe Souldiers had beene Preachers to publiſh this truth unto the World, had not their mouthes beene ſtopt with ſilver; for as this opens the mouthes of many, to bruite forth and to teſtifie many lies; ſo it ſhuts the mouthes of as many, to conceale and keepe ſecret many truthes; and therefore the high Prieſts did give large money to theſe ſouldiers, to conceale this truth, and to belie themſelues, to ſay that they were aſleepe, when as indeed they neither ſlumbree nor ſlept. How the love of money maketh many men to doe any thing.

Well then, if they were aſleepe, how can they tell, what became of him, and why did the chiefe Prieſts give them ſuch large ſummes of monies for their negligence? or if they were awake, why did they hire them ſo dearely to ſay they were aſleepe? To all this they muſt anſwer now to us, as they did heretofore in another caſe to Chriſt; We cannot tell: But then O fooliſh Iewes, if you cannot tell, why will you not beleeve that your Meſſias is alreadie come, and that God hath rayſed him from the dead? Saint Paul tels us why, Becauſe partly obſtinacy is come upon them, untill the fulneſſe of the Gentiles be come in. O Lord if it be thy will, doe thou open their eyes, that they may ſee this truth.

Matth.28. 27.

Rom.11.25.

CHAP. VI.

Of the teſtimony of the Angell, and the manifold apparitions of Chriſt after his Reſurrection, to prove the truth and certainty of his Reſurrection.

YOu ſee then, how the Iewes are blinded, to deſtroy themſelues; but on the other ſide, we doe know, and beleeve, and teach this Ieſus the Sonne of Mary, whom the Iewes have crucified, to be the true Meſſias and Saviour of the World, not onely becauſe he lived without ſinne, and died without cauſe, (on his owne behalfe;) but eſpecially becauſe that he being dead, and laid in his grave, did declare himſelfe mightily to be the Sonne of God, by his Reſurrection from the dead: And this Reſurrection of him, we doe moſt faithfully beleeve, and as conſtantly teach, for theſe three eſpeciall reaſons and reſpects; and a threefold cord is not eaſily broken.

Rom.1.4.

That wee beleeve the Reſurrection of Chriſt, for three ſpeciall reſpects.

1. In reſpect of this Angelicall aſſertion.
2. In reſpect of his perſonall apparitions.
3. In reſpect of many other circumſtantiall demonſtrations.

Firſt, the Angell ſaid unto the women, why ſeeke yee the living among the dead? he is not here but he is riſen, Et ſi non credideritis oraculo credite oculo, and if you will not beleeve us, beleeve your owne eyes, for you may ſee the place where he lay. And this was ſpoken unto two women, as Saint Matthew ſheweth, and by two Angels, as Saint Luke ſaith; and therefore if Dives thought that the words of one man comming from the dead would be ſufficient to make all his brethren to beleeve the torments of hell, why ſhould not the words of theſe heavenly Angels be alonely ſufficient to make us to beleeve this divine truth of the reſurrection of the Sonne of God? for the Angels though they be mutabiles natura, mutable in reſpect of their nature, yet are they now confirmati per gratiam, ne à veritate voluntatem averterent, ſo confirmed by grace, that they ſhall never avert themſelues from the truth, ſaith Iſidorus.

Matth.28. 1. Luke 24. 4.

Firſt, The Angels teſtifie the Reſurrection of Chriſt.

Iſidorus de ſummo bono.

Secondly, as the Angels had teſtified, that he was not there in the grave among the dead, but was riſen and alive among the living; ſo truth it ſelfe confirmes this truth unto us, by thoſe manifold apparitions that he made after his reſurrection, during the ſpace of forty dayes, that before he aſcended into heaven, he walked here on earth. And theſe (if I be not far deceived in my reckoning) were at leaſt twelue times, according to the number of his 12. Apoſtles.

2 That Chriſt appeared twelue ſeverall times after his reſurrection. Marke 16 9.

Firſt, he appeared unto Mary Magdalen apart; where we muſt obſerve, that he appeared firſt unto a woman, that no woman ſhould thenceforth be any wayes reproached by any man, for their firſt tranſgreſſion and ſeduction of man; quia ut culpam viro tranſfudit, tranſfudit etiam & gratiam, veteriſque lapſus ærumnam reſurrectionis judicio compenſavit, becauſe that as a woman was the firſt inſtrument of death, ſo ſhe was the firſt meſſenger of life, and brought the firſt tidings of the reſurrection of Chriſt, which is the ſureſt argument of the ſalvation of man.

First, to Mary Magdalen and why.

Ambroſ. l. 10. in Luc. 24. Beda in c. vlt. Luc.

And

And he appeared to this woman first, quia Dominum præ cæteris dilexit, ideo præ cæteris videre meruit, because she loved him above all, therefore she obtained to see him before all: She loved much, saith our Saviour, and she saw him first saith the Evangelists: and therefore no doubt, but he shewed himselfe to her first, because she loved him most: whereby we see that with God there is no respect of persons, no difference of sex, but whosoever loveth him, man or woman, young or old, that person shall be respected of him; for I will love them that love me, saith the Lord: and therefore whosoever feareth God and worketh righteousnesse, whosoever loves him most, and seekes him first, he may be sure he shall be first found of him. And secondly, he appeared to this woman first, because this woman was most memorious and mindfull of him, and of all those mercies and benefits wherewith Christ had inriched her soule; and therefore he was most mindfull of her. Aug medit. c. 35.

But who this Mary Magdalen was, it is easier questioned then answered; for Theophylact, Stapulensis, and others, doe avouch that there were three Mary Magdalens; Saint Ambrose saith there were two; Albertus, Aquinas in Iohn 12. and Roffensis de tribus Magdalenis, doe constantly affirme there was but one: and she, they say, was a Noble woman, one of the bloud-royall of the Tribe of Inda, the daughter of one Syrus and Eucharia, a sister unto Lazarus and Martha, which divided the inheritance of their father betwixt them three; Lazarus had all the possessions that were in Ierusalem; Martha had Bethany; and Mary had Magdalum Castrum, the Castle of Magdala, from whence she was called Mary Magdalen. Hieron. ep. de quæst. hebdom. Ambrosi. 10 in Luc. 24. Albertus in Luc 7. Whether there were more Mary Magdalens then one.

For my part, I confesse curiosity is to be avoided, yet the truth is to be imbraced, and Maries face is not like Moses face, so vailed with mysteries, but that we may without danger inquire who she is; and therefore to say what I thinke, I am of S. Ambrose minde, that (at least) there were two (if there were no more) Mary Magdalens; for Saint Iohn saith, that Mary Magdalen stood at the Sepulcher weeping, and that Iesus appeared unto her, and said touch me not: here is a Mary Magdalen all alone: and Saint Matthew saith, that Mary Magdalen and the other Mary came unto the Sepulcher, and were instructed by the Angels that Christ was risen, and therefore they departed and went away with joy; and it is not said that Mary Magdalen staied behind, but that both went (for he names but two) and as they went to tell his Disciples, Iesus met them, and they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him: and therefore no doubt, but there must be two distinct Mary Magdalens; for she whereof Saint Iohn speaketh, was alone, and staid by the Sepulcher weeping, and was denied to touch Christ, because (as Saint Ambrose saith) shee doubted, and did not as yet fully beleeve the truth of his resurrection; bu shee whereof Saint Matthew speaketh, was accompanied with the other Mary, and returned with the other Mary, and met him in the way, and held him by the feet, and worshipped him, Christ suffering her to doe this, because she beleeved him to be risen from the dead. Iohn 20. 1. 11. 18. Matth. 28. 1. 9. Why Mary Magdalen was not suffered to touch Christ.

Now which of these Mary Magdalens was the woman to whom Christ first appeared, Saint Marke plainely sheweth, that it was she out of whom he had cast seven devils; a great sinner, and a great lover of our Saviour Christ, the chiefest sinner of all these women, and the first seeker of our blessed Saviour; for she came alone, while it was yet darke, before the day-light, by the light of grace; but the other Mary Magdalen came with Mary the mother of Iames and Salome, at the rising of the Sun, long after her. A great comfort and a rare patterne for all sinners; her sinnes repented of, and relinquished, were no hinderance of her to see our Saviour first: but because her sinnes were great, we see her repentance was very great, her care was great, her love was great; for shee wept and washed our Saviours feet with her teares, and wiped them with the haires of her head, a true token of inward sorrow; she powred a boxe-full of precious ointment upon his head as hee sate at meate, an apparant argument Marke 16. 9. Iohn 20 1. Marke 16. 2. The great care & diligence of this Mary Magdalen.

of her ontward works; shee rose earely, she sought him carefully, and she wept bitterly, not with those undiscreet women for Thammyse, which was a brazen image with leaden eyes, that being molten with heate, did seeme to weepe, and so caused the women to sympathize in teares, and to weepe (as is thought) for Adonis: but shee weepes for Adonai, for her Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ; a rare example of great piety; and therefore though she had offended much, yet because she sorrowed much, she loved much, she had much forgiven her, and much love shewed unto her; for he which is first and last, did shew himselfe first unto her: O that they which walke in her sinnes, would tread in the same steps of her repentance.

Ezech. 8. 14.

Secondly, to the three women returning homeward.

Secondly, he appeared to all the women together, as they returned homeward from the Sepulcher; to teach us, that never any man truly sought for Christ, but with these women, he should be sure to find him.

Thirdly, to Simon Peter alone. Chrys. 1 Cor. 15. 5.

Thirdly, he appeared to Simon Peter alone, the first among the men saith Chrysostome; for when the women told the Disciples, that Iesus was risen, Peter and Iohn ran both unto the Sepulcher, and though Iohn came there first, yet Peter entred first; to note unto us, not onely that mysticall truth, which divers of the Fathers have observed, viz. that the Synagogue of the Iewes, like Iohn that came first to the monument, but would not enter, had the first meanes to come to Christ, and yet refused to come unto him; for it commanded the precepts of the Law, and it heard the Prophecies of the Gospell concerning the incarnation and the passion of the Messias, and yet quem longè latèque prophetavit, præsentem vidit & recipere renuit, whom they long expected and much desired, and ranne fast to see him, when they come unto him, or rather when he came to them, they quite rejected him, and would not beleeve in him; and the Church of the Gentiles, like Saint Peter that came last, yet entred first into the Sepulcher, though they had the last and the least meanes to come to Christ, yet would they first beleeve in Christ crucified, according as it was prophecied of them, as soone as they shall heare of me they shall obey me; but also that historicall truth, (which Chrysostome observeth) that as Saint Peter first entred into the grave, so he should first see him that was laid and raised out of that grave, and that for these three especiall reasons.

A mistery discovered.

Why of all the Apostles he appeared first to S. Peter.

Idem hom 38. in 1 Cor. 15.

First, lest that if he had appeared first to others, Peter should thinke Christ had rejected him, as he worthily deserved, because he had so unjustly denyed Christ, Ideo Petro apparuit primum, therefore he appeared first to Peter, lest otherwise he should give offence to Peter, and seeme still to be mindfull of his offence, saith Theophylact, and Saint Chrysostome.

Secondly, because Saint Peter was a most faithfull, and a most worthy witnesse, such a one as would so willingly and so manfully, as he did in all places, testifie and lay downe his life for the testimony of Iesus Christ.

Thirdly, because Saint Peter was the first and the chiefest Apostle whom he called first, and who confest him first to be the Sonne of God: and therefore he doth appeare first unto him, and biddeth the women tell his Disciples and Peter, that is, and Peter especially, that he was risen, and went before them into Galilee.

Theoph in Mar. cap. 16.

But when or where, or after what manner he appeared thus first unto Peter, because the Scripture doth not expresse it, we can no wayes determine it, as both Theophylact and S. Gregory doe observe: and therefore it being a question, plni subtilitatis quàm utilitatis habens, that hath more subtile scrupulosity then any comfortable utility, I will peaceably passe it over.

Fourthly, to the Disciples travelling to Emaus. Luk. 24. 13. Theoph sup. Luc.

Fourthly, he appeared to the two Disciples journeying towards Emaus; the name of the one was Cleophas, and many thinke the other to be Saint Luke himselfe, who out of his modesty concealeth his owne name, saith Theophylact: It is certaine that they were none of the Apostles but some of the seventy two Disciples (as Nicholaus de Gorham well observeth;) for they came to Ierusalem, and found the 11 Apostles gathered together: and therfore these two could not be any

Chap. IX.

Of the manner how Christ rose, and of the particular application thereof unto our selues.

Secondly, we are to consider the manner how our Saviour rose, and many other particulars concerning his resurrection, but chiefly we should obserue that his resurrection was

1. In respect of the place, from the dead;
2. In respect of the time, early;
3. In respect of his person, it was

1. true
2. perfect
3. glorious

a The manner how Christ rose.

I will not stand upon these particulars; but to apply all unto our selues, that we may reape some fruit by all, I must intreat you to remember what the Apostle saith, If thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and shalt beleeve in thine heart, that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saued; for as I told you before, that the resurrection of Christ is the onely, maine, unanswerable argument to prove Christ to be the true Messias, and the Saviour of the world; so heere you see the Apostle putteth the true beliefe in our Saviours resurrection, as the onely chiefe point that is necessary and sufficient for our salvation: and therefore it is not without cause, that the doctrine of the resurrection should be insisted upon, to be preached and manifested by us, and to be learned and beleeved by you.

The application of the resurrection unto our selues. Rom. 10. 9.

But here we must know, that it is not the bare Theoricke, and intellectuall knowledge, that Christ is raised from the dead, at that time, from that place, and in that manner, as I have shewed unto you before, is sufficient for our salvation; for so the devils know it, and beleeve it too; and yet they receive no fruit nor benefit thereby; but it is the practicke, experimentall and applicative knowledge and beliefe in the resurrection of the Sonne of God, that is effectuall for the salvation of man. And therefore Saint Paul prayes, that Hee may know Christ, and finde in himselfe the vertue and power of the resurrection of Christ; for as the rising of the head doth ever cause the rising of all the parts of the body, which is united unto the head; so the resurrection of Christ doth ever worke a resurrection of all the members of Christ; for so the Apostle teacheth us; If the spirit of him that raised up Iesus dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken, and so raise up, your mortall bodies, by that spirit which dwelleth in you.

That it is not the Theoricke, but the applicative knowledge of Christs resurrection that will helpe us.

Philip. 3. 10. 11.

Rom. 8. 11.

And we find this resurrection of us that are his members to be two-fold,

1. From sinne, and from all the vanities of this world.
2. From death, and from the corruption of the grave.

That the resurrection of Christian is two-fold.

First, if we be the members of Christ, then certainely we are risen with Christ, risen I say, from the death of sinne, unto the life of righteousnesse; and if we be risen with Christ, then doth our hearts wish and desire those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, saith the Apostle; and therefore whosoever walloweth in sinne, and delighteth in the things of this world, it is certaine that he hath not as yet any part or portion in the resurrection of Iesus Christ; for if we be the members of Christ, we must also rise with Christ, and we must rise as Christ hath risen; for otherwise we would all rise, and many doe rise, but not as Christ rose, and therefore such risers

1 From sinne.

Coloss 3.

That the resurrection of Christ is a patterne to teach us how we should rise from sinne and from the company of sinners.

——— tolluntur in altum
ut lapsu graviore ruant.———

the higher they rise the greater shall be their fall, saith the Poet.

But we must rise as Christ hath risen, and that is, as I told you before,

First, in respect of the place, from the dead; so must we rise from the dead

1 In respect of the place from the dead.

workes of ſinne, and from all thoſe that are dead in ſinne: Chriſt left the dead in their graves, and walked among the living, and I would to God we could leave the company and ſociety of thoſe that doe ſtill lye wallowing and ſtinking in the graves of ſinne, and joyne our ſelues unto thoſe that live the life of grace: for, as he was a mad man poſſeſſed of a devill, that had his abiding among the tombes; ſo are all they no better then mad men, and poſſeſt of devils, that have their converſation with thoſe that are dead in ſinnes: and therefore I adviſe all that would live with Chriſt, to follow the counſell of the Apoſtle, not to bee companions of them that are dead in ſinne, but as Chriſt roſe and left the dead, ſo doe you riſe and leave theſe dead and deadly ſinners.

2 In reſpect of the time quickly. Eccleſ. 12. 1.

Secondly, in reſpect of the time, Chriſt roſe ſpeedily without delay, he roſe earely before the morning watch; ſo ſhould we riſe from ſinne, and as Salomon ſaith, Remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth, before the evill dayes come, when we ſhall ſay we have no pleaſure in them. And yet it is a fearefull thing to conſider how many men do put off and delay their repentance, and amendment of life unto their lateſt daies: for we ſerve the world, and follow after the luſts of our owne fleſh while we are young, and we put all the burthen of ſerving God, upon our weake and feeble and decrepit age: we ſacrifice the flowers of our yeeres to ſinne and Satan, the fineſt, the faireſt, and the fatteſt beaſts; but to God we thinke it is enough to give the blinde, the halt, and the lame, the withered, and wrinckled, and barreneſt times of our life: but God will have none ſuch; for he refuſeth ſuch ſacrifices in his Law: and therefore ſurely he will not eaſily receive ſuch in the time of the Goſpell; for as there were three paiments of firſt fruits among the Iewes; the firſt was primitiæ ſpicarum, the firſt fruits of their eares of corne, and this was paid earely about Eaſter; the ſecond was primitiæ panum, the firſt fruits of their loaves, when their corne was converted into bread, and this was ſomewhat earely too, about Whitſuntide; and the third was primitiæ frugum, the firſt fruits of all their latter fruits in generall, and this was very late, about the fall of the leafe in September; and in the two firſt paiments, which were offered earely, God accepted a part for himſelfe; but in the third paiment, which came late, God would have no part at all; even ſo, if we offer the firſt fruits of our young yeeres earlely unto God, he will accept it for himſelfe; but if we give our beſt yeeres unto Satan, and offer the laſt yeeres unto God, I ſay no more, but he will not eaſily receive them: and no marvell, quia labore fracta inſtrumenta, &c. for to what end, and with what face can any man bring thoſe inſtruments to worke in Gods vineyard, which are blunted and broken in the ſervice of the World? or with what honeſty can we offer that unto God, which we would be aſhamed to offer unto a man? for who would offer a lame horſe, a diſordered clocke, or a torne booke unto his King? and yet our fleſh is our beaſt, the courſe of our life is our clocke, and the hiſtory of our actions is our booke; and ſhall we offer our fleſh unto God, when it is lame and tyred with exceſſe of wantonneſſe? ſhall we commend our lives unto him, when as the whole courſe of the ſame is out of order? or ſhall we preſent the ſtory of our actions unto him, when as a thouſand ſinnes of our owne (for which we ſhould be ſorrowfull) and a thouſand bleſſings of God (for which we ſhould be thankefull) are quite defaced, and torne out of our memory? or if we ſhould offer ſuch unto God, why ſhould we thinke it ſtrange, that he ſhould reject them? quia temperantia in ſenectute non eſt temperantia, ſed impotentia intemperantiæ: for continency, abſtinency, temperancy, and ſuch like, in old age, are no vertues, but a diſability to be vitious; ſo to leave good fellowſhip when thou art ſicke, and many other ſinnes when thou art old, is not a leaving and forſaking of thy ſinnes, but thy ſinnes have left thee, like paraſites in adverſity; Nullus ad amiſſas ibit amicus opes; for if thou couldeſt have cheriſhed them any longer, longer they would have continued with thee.

That God will hardly accept late ſervices tendered unto him.

Three paiments of firſt fruits among the Iewes.

Becauſe late ſervice is ſeldome true ſervice.

And therefore, ſeeing it is good for a man to beare his yoke in his youth (as Ieremy ſaith) becauſe age is unfit for burthens; let us not be like the perſecutors of the

the Iewes, which laid the heavieſt yokes upon the ancienteſt men; let us not reſerve the weight and burthen of our repentance, untill our latter age; but if we would have God not to remember the ſinnes of our youth, let us remember God in the dayes of our youth, and eſpecially ſeeing we know not whether God will heare us in our age or not, becauſe we would not amend our lives in our youth, and becauſe indeed whatſoever is done then, is commonly done amiſſe, let us herein imitate our Saviour Chriſt, to riſe early from the bed of ſinne, and to ſay with that Princely Prophet, O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeeke thee. Pſal. 63. 1.

And there be two maine reaſons, that ſhould move us to riſe haſtily and ſpeedily from ſinne; Two ſpeciall reaſons to moove us ſpeedily to forſake all ſinne.

that is, { 1. The nature of ſinne. 2. The uncertainty of our life. } For

First, Sinne in the Soule, is like a ſtaine in a garment; the longer it remaines in it, the harder it is taken out of it. 1 Reaſon.

Vidi ego quod fuerat primum medicabile vulnus,
Deſertum longæ damna tuliſſe moræ:

For as in the diſeaſes of the body, the longer they be uncured, the more the body is indangered; or as we ſee it in a fire, Flamma recens parva ſparſa recedit aqua, A little water quenches a ſparke, but much water will hardly quench great flames; Even ſo it is in the maladies of the Soule, the longer we continue in ſinne, the harder we can leave ſinne; And therefore, let us make no tarrying to turne to the Lord our God, but as Herod dealt with the Infants, ſo let us deale with ſinne, kill it while it is young. Eccleſ. 5. 7. Math. 2. 16.

It is recorded of Roffenſis, that when Henry the eight ſent to him for his conſent and approbation to ſuppreſſe ſome ſuperfluous Abbies, he told him, that on a time the Axe ſent unto the Trees of the Forreſt, onely for ſo much wood as would make it but a handle, and in requitall, it would pare and prune off all rotten and fruitleſſe branches that did nothing elſe but cumber the Trees, and hinder the livelier branches to beare forth better fruit; the requeſt ſeeming reaſonable, was unqueſtionably imbraced, and moſt willingly granted unto the Axe: but the ſucceſſe anſwered not the expectation of the Trees; for inſtead of pruning the corrupted branches, it ſoone waſted ſtocke and roote, untill it made way for the Plow, uncontrolably to paſſe through the middeſt of the Forreſt: And ſo I feare (ſaith Roffenſis) your Majeſty will proceede with the poſſeſſions of the Church: So he did; and ſo doth ſinne deale with every Man; it demands but little, but it ſtill incroacheth, untill it deſtroyeth our ſoules. And therefore we ſhould withſtand ſinne at the firſt, and never ſuffer it ſo much as to enter into our ſoules; And we ſhould follow the counſell of the Bridegroome, Ariſe my Love, my Dove, my faire one; Make haſte, as the Angell ſaid unto Lot, to ſave thy ſelfe, and come away. O come, come with me from Lebanon, my Spouſe, with me from Lebanon, looke from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir, and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes, and from the Mountaines of the Leopards. Roffenſis his parable to Henry the eighth. Cant. 2. 10. Gen. 19. 22. Cant. 4. 8.

Secondly, We ought to make haſte to riſe from ſin, and to begin betimes to ſerve the Lord, by reaſon of the ſhortneſſe and uncertainty of our life; for as Hugo Cardinalis ſaith, The way that we are to paſſe is long, the place that we are to goe unto farre, and our time ſhort; and we know not how ſoone God will call for us: And therefore, we ought to worke the worke of God while it is day; For the night commeth, when no man can worke. 2 Reaſon. Iohn 9. 4.

And here we muſt further obſerve, that as he roſe early, ſo he roſe firſt of all; for He is the firſt fruits of them that ſleepe; To teach us, that we ſhould alſo ſtrive to be the firſt in all goodneſſe: but we are loath to doe this; we will doe as others doe, we cannot abide to be ſingular: ſuch is our Nature; we ſtrive with the Phariſees to be firſt in honors, That we ſhould ſtrive to be firſt in Gods ſervice.

Lucan. in Pharsal. lib. 1.

Nec quenquam jam ferre potest Cæsarve priorem
Pompejusve parem. ——

We would faine be the first in reputation, but we never strive to be the first in performing the duties of Religion: It was otherwise with Ioshua, who called all Israel together, and perswaded them all to serue their God, or if they would not, he told them plainely, That he and his House would serve the Lord: And I would it were so with us, for it is our greatest honour to be the first in Gods service.

Iosh. 24. 15.

3 In respect of the person, he rose.
1 Truely.

Thirdly, In respect of his owne person, Christ rose,

First, Truly, without hypocrisie, not fainedly, but certainely: So should we; for woe be unto you hypocrites, and woe to him that goeth two manner of wayes; that holds up his hands, and lifts up his eyes to Heaven, and yet hath his heart full of all unrighteousnesse; for though with men things are judged as they seeme, yet God seeth our hearts, and we deceive our selues, if we thinke to deceive him. It is observed in Nature, that the Foxe nips the necke, the Mastive the throate, the Ferret the liver, but God careth onely for the heart; for he saith, Sonne give me thy heart; and he is said to be a searcher and a tryer of the hearts: And therefore, we must not make Saint Pauls shew of godlinesse, to be Saint Peters cloake of wickednesse, to rise from sinne in shew, and not in truth; for these rise like Samuel, fainedly, not truly, by a Witch, not by God: It is that Witch hypocrisie, worse then the Witches of Thessalie, that raiseth them up a little to deceive the World, and to make us beleeve they are true Samuels, whereas indeed they be very Divels. Our Saviour bids us to beware of such, that have Iacobs voice and Esaues hands, the words of Saints, and the workes of Iewes; And I bid them beware of Satan, for being raised up by him, and not by the power of Christ, he will at last unmaske their hypocriticall faces, and then he will cast them down, and destroy them; for though it is reported, that in a certaine battell some lost their livings for running away, which notwithstanding were bestowed upon others, that fled tenne leagues further; yet it is not so with God; for He will render unto every man according to his worke.

Eccles. 2. 12.
That we should raise our selues truely, and not hypocritically from sinne.
2 Tim. 3. 5.
1 Pet. 2. 16.
2 Cor. 5. 10.

2 Totally.
That we should raise our selues from all sinnes.

Secondly, Christ rose totally without partition; for he left no part behind him: So should we rise from all sins, or else all is but in vaine; for we reade that Herod at the preaching of Iohn Baptist, did raise himselfe from many sins, but from his dearely beloved Herodias, he would not rise; so many men can be perswaded by the Preachers to forsake many sins, but from their bosome, darling, usuall, customary sinnes, they will not rise. And surely every man is naturally inclined to some sinnes more then to others; as some men to good-fellowship and drunkennesse, some to wantonnesse, and these could willingly be contented to refraine (as they doe sometimes) from all, or most other sinnes; but from these, their naturally beloved or usually practised sinnes, they cannot, they will not abstaine: It is their infirmity, and they cannot leave them: and therefore as Naaman the Syrian said unto Elizeus, onely in this thing the Lord pardon thy servant; so say these men, but in a worse manner, onely in this sinne the Lord be mercifull unto me, and I will strive to raise my selfe from all other sinnes whatsoever.

2 Reg. 5. 18.

Aulus Gellius. attic. noct. 4. 12 c. 1.

It is reported by Gellius that Phavorinus, seeing a mother sharing her duties betwixt her selfe and her nurse, said; Quodnam est hoc contra naturam imperfectum, & dimidiatum matrum genus? What a strange halfe-kind of mother against nature is this, to bring forth, and presently to cast forth from her the fruit of her owne wombe? such halfe-kinde of Christians have we now a dayes, that will scarce performe halfe their duties: it were well, if they were like Naaman, or like Agrippa, almost Christians; if they were so, and could goe in sincere practice, as the young man in the Gospell went in proud profession, all these things have I done from my youth up; yet because with that young man they want one thing, all the other things will availe them nothing; for to be behind in no gift, as S. Paul speaketh, is the generall description of every truly renued Christian: and we know that as on what part soever of a man a Lyon catcheth hold, he will hold it fast, and draw us by that part unto himselfe, or we must suffer that part to be torne off from our selves, and what gate soever the enemy findeth open, he can through that one gate leade in all his Army into our Citty; even so Satan cares not where he may have hold of thee, so he may have hold of thee, and he cares not by what doore he may enter into thy soule, so he may enter in by any doore; for as one leake may sinke a ship, one wound may kill a man; so one sinne especially practised may slay the soule: and what availeth it whether covetousnesse or prodigality, precisenesse or prophanesse doe raigne in us? whether on the right hand, or on the left hand, by over-going or undergoing, we be deprived of salvation? for though the by-paths of iniquity, which doe misleade a Christian, be very many, yet they all meete in one place; for the issues of them all are the issues of death, saith Salomon. Pro. 16. 25.

Acts 26. 28.

Matth. 19. 20.

hold

And therefore if this roaring Lyon hath catcht hold of thine eye, that by wanton lookes, lookes full of adulteries (as Saint Peter speaketh) it maketh thee to offend, pull it out and cast it off, that thou mayest free the rest of thy selfe from eternall destruction; and so of all other parts, doe as our Saviour bids thee, free thy selfe from Satan; Et redime te captum quam queas minimo, and free thy selfe as soone as thou canst, and as well as thou canst; for thou wert better shake off that one sin, then that Satan by that one sinne should take thee into Hell fire: and as they use to doe in besieged Cities, where the assault is soreest, there they place the stoutest men; so doe thou against sin and Satan, strive most to hinder him, where he striveth most to enter; for so David saith, that he refrained from his owne wickednesse, that is, even from that sin, that he was most of all inclined unto; and so let us wholly and perfectly rise from all sins. 2 Pet. 2. 14.

Thirdly, Christ rose constantly without apostacy, that is, he rose gloriously, never to die againe; for Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more, death hath no more power over him: and so his epithite is, he that was dead, and is alive, and liveth for evermore: So should we rise from sin, never to sin againe, not like Lazarus that rose from his grave and dyed againe, rise now from sin and immediately fall into the same or the like sinnes againe; but as we must obey Christ his voice, saying, Come unto me, so we must obey his voice, saying, abide in me; and as William the Conquerer is said to have sunke all his ships, when he arrived here in England, because he would take away all hope of flying backe; so must we sinke all sinnes, that wee may never swimme or ride on sinne againe, drowne them in the seas, dash them against the walls, and so shake hands with all sins, that wee never returne to any sin againe; for, though it was an errour in Novatus to denie remission unto sins of recidivation, that is, when a man relapseth and falleth againe into the same sin, because the Apostle saith, It is unpossible that they which were once inlightened, (and so raised from sin) if they fall away, should be renued by repentance; and S. Peter saith, It had beene better for them never to have knowne the wayes of righteousnesse, then after they have knowne it, to turne away from the holy Commandements; and because we never read that either Christ raised the same men twice, no not the widdowes sonne, whom he pitied, nor yet Lazarus whom he loved, nor that the Saints ever fell into the same sinnes againe, after they had them once remitted, as David never committed adultery againe, Peter never denied his Master againe, Paul never persecuted the Church againe, after they had these sinnes once remitted; though I say this was an errot in the Novatians, 1 because the Apostles speake of falling away from Christ, by a finall apostacie, and not of falling againe into sinne through our carnall infirmity; 2 because the comparison of Christ raising the dead, with the raising of us from sin, doth not (as no other comparison doth) in all things holy æquipage; 3 because the other men not falling into the same sinnes againe, doth but shew that they had a great measure of grace to preserve them from falling, and not prove a deniall of renuing grace unto us, if we should fall againe; and they are set downe for our imitation, that we should strive to stand, and never to fall, and not for our desperation, if we doe fall into the same sins againe; yet I say, that this relapsing into sinne, this returning with

3 To die no more. That we should so rise from sin, as never to fall to sin againe. Revel. 1. 18.

Mat. 11. 28. Iohn 15. 4.

Why Novatus thought sins of recidivation, should not be pardoned. Heb. 6.

2 Pet. 2. 21.

That relapsing into sin is very dangerous.

πάσχει κολαίνει ῥᾳδίως ὑδατος, ὑπὸ λεχέων. Apud Galen l. 3. de temperament. Asildne illisu durum cavat undula Saxum.

with the dog unto his vomit, and with the swine to her wallowing in the mire, is exceeding fearefull and dangerous: for as vulnus iteratum, &c. nature is tired with the continuall assault of the same diseases, and at last is forced to yeeld unto them, if it cannot by some meanes expell them, and as the same sore often wounded is very hardly cured; so the same sinnes still assaulting our soules, will without doubt (if they be not extinguished by grace) make our last end worse then our beginning.

Comming annulus ofte.

And therefore, it were well for us, if (when we have risen from sinne) wee would ever pray to God for grace, that we might never fall into sin againe; for otherwise, as the old Proverbe is,

Gutta cavat lapidem, non vi, sed sæpe cadendo,
Sic homo fit Dæmon, non vi sed sæpe cadendo;
scilicet in peccatum: often sinning, makes the greatest sinners.

What a fearefull sin Apostacie is.

But if the relapsing into any particular sinne be so dangerous, O then what a fearefull thing is the falling backe from our most holy profession? surely, it is the most remarkeable thing in the description of the sinne against the Holy Ghost, and the most apparant signe of eternall destruction: behold the punishments of Apostataes that are left for our examples: Lots wife was turned into a pillar of salt, and the children of Israel, that in their hearts were turned backe againe into Ægypt, had their carkasses left in the wilderneſse; and no marvell; for this is a transcendent sinne; and I know no sinne so great as this; Herods bloudy murders, even of infants, and Nero's savage cruelty, even against the Saints, and the most barbarous acts of the most inhumane heathen Tyrants, did never sound so odious in mine eares, as that horrid name of Julian the Apostata; for that must stand as a rule infallible, that they are farre better which never knew the way of righteousnesse, then they which once knew it, and then turned aside from the holy Commandement.

2 Pet. 2. 21.

Beloved, it hath pleased God to bring us out of Ægypt, and to us that walked in darkenesse, and in the shadow of death, hath the glorious light of the Gospell shined, and the truth of Christ is amongst us; O let us not love darkenesse more then light, let us not returne from light to darkenesse.

Esay 9. 2.

I know there is a continuall opposition, and a mighty warre betwixt truth and falshood, farre greater then that betwixt the house of Saul and the house of David, and each one of them seeketh to prevaile against the other; and I hope I neede not use any argument to proove that we are in the truth: It was the Corinthians fault, after they were baptized, beleeved in Christ, and professed Christ a long while, all on a sudden (like the men that sailed into the midst of the Ocean, and awaking out of a dreame, made a great question whether they were in any ship or no) they began to doubt whether there was any Resurrection or not; and I hope we will not be like any of these herin, after we have it so deerely purchased with the blood of Martyrs, so truely preached by the painefull servants of Christ, and so long preserved amongst us by the free grace of Christ, now to question, whether we be in the truth or not; for that is beyond all question; God hath brought it to us, wee have preached it to you, and you have beleeved it, and profest it gloriously and Christianly before the face of the whole world: and therefore I will onely shew you two speciall points to bee our helps and furtherance in our warfare against errour.

Two speciall points to be considered.

The first shall be to preserve us in the truth.

The Second shall be to suppresse falshood, that it prevaile not against the truth.

1 Point to preserve us in the truth by a double consideration.

For the first, I desire all men to consider these two things.

Videlicet, { 1. Who we be that teach you. } And
{ 2. What they are that seeke to seduce you. }

1 Who we are that teach the people.

First, we are plaine men, that compasse not sea and land to inlarge our Monarchie; wee labour not so much to get your wealth, as to save your soules; for as the Apostle saith, We seeke not yours, but you; and I hope most of us (if occasion served, ved, you ſhould ſee it) would ſeale our words with our blond: for as there were 7000. men in Iſrael, that bowed not their knees to Baal; ſo I aſſure my ſelfe there are many thouſands in England, that would lay downe their neckes, and leeſe their lives, rather then they would depart a nayles bredth from the truth of that doctrine which we have taught: And I boldly ſay it, if Satan ſhould be let looſe, to perſecute the Saints of God, I doe unfainedly wiſh, my deereſt bones might firſt burne to give light unto all them that deſire to walke in this truth.

Secondly, conſider what they be that ſeeke to ſeduce you; and I doubt not but you ſhall finde moſt of them, to be either ſuch as were nuzled in errors a cunabulis, even from their cradles, by their ſeduced friends, popiſh children of popiſh parents, ſent and bred in the myſteries of iniquity; and ſhould we looke for theſe to be otherwiſe then they be? or elſe to be ſuch as through diſcontent to ſee ſome hoyſted up unto Moſes chayre, which are ſcarce worthy to fit at Gamaliels feet, and themſelves that have good parts in them, through want of friends, or meanes, to be quite neglected, have gone from us, either becauſe they hoped for better fortunes in other ſoyles, or becauſe they were lothe to indure their meane fortunes to be perceiv'd among their owne friends; becauſe noble ſpirits had rather begge where they are not knowne; then any waies be baſe where their worth is ſeene: I confeſſe a fault in neglecting them; and it is too common amongſt us; but will you be contented to hazard your ſoules upon their perſwaſions that hazarded their owne through diſcontent? I hope better things of you, and I aſſure my ſelfe, that as you are in the truth, ſo you will continue in the truth unto your death.

2 Who they bee that ſeeke to ſeduce our people.

Acts 22.3.

For the ſecond, how we ſhall ſuppreſſe falſhod, that it prevaile not againſt truth. I referre you to my firſt Treatiſe of the miſery of Man, where I have ſet downe my beſt advice in this caſe. But here it may be, ſome will ſay, Quorſum hæc? to what end is all this ſpoken, to inſinuate feare into the hearts of men, where there is no feare? I anſwer, that his Gratious Majeſty, not onely by his Royall authority in maintaining true Religion, but alſo by his Divine pen, by his owne paines, defending the truth of our Religion, and his wiſe Councellors, whoſe Counſells are like the great deep, too great for me to dive into them, and too high for you to attaine unto them, do not only free us from all feare of idolatry and ſuperſtition, but doe alſo aſſure us of a moſt happy continuance of our moſt true Religion, in a farre more glorious manner then our meane capacities can perceive: and yet there is one great, powerfull, and politicke one, under whoſe wings many are ſheltered, and he intrudeth himſelfe into all places, Countrey and City, Court and Councell-chamber, and laboureth by all meanes to put out our light, and to darken the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, and to bring in idolatry and ſuperſtition into our land againe; and that is the prince of darkeneſſe, the divell and Satanas, that entred into Paradiſe, to deceive our Fore-fathers, that ventured upon the Sonne of God, and ſaid, mitte te deorſum, if thou be the Sonne of God, caſt thy ſelfe downeward, and will ſuggeſt it into every man, if thou would'ſt be the childe of God, mitte te retrorſum, then muſt thou returne backward, and be as thy Fore-fathers were: There is no doubt of this; if he could ſend none from Rome hither to corrupt us; yet while he hath roome for any in hell, he will never leave to labour by his wicked ſuggeſtions, to corrupt us himſelfe; he will enter into our chambers, he will creepe into our boſomes, and he will ſeeke by all meanes for to deceive us; we are not ignorant of his devices: And therefore I ſay, let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he falleth, and let us pray to God for grace, that as he hath raiſed us from ſin, and ſuperſtition; ſo he would preſerve us from relapſing or falling back into any of theſe ſins againe. And thus you ſee how Chriſt raiſed himſelfe from death, and how we ſhould raiſe our ſelves from ſin.

3 Poſnt to ſuppreſſe falſhood. Vide, The Miſery of man.

That Satan al waies laboureth to bring men into idolatry and ſuperſtition.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

And here we muſt further note, that as the conſideration of Chriſts Reſurrection ſhould make us conformable unto him, by our reſurrection from all ſin; ſo it ſhould be moſt comfortable unto us, both in reſpect of Chriſt, and our ſelves; quia reſurgens Chriſtus tantum attulit lætitiæ, quantum moriens attulit doloris, becauſe Chriſt at his Reſurrection brought us more joy and comfort, then he did ſorrow and griefe

That the Reſurrection of Chriſt is a cauſe of great joy unto us.

griefe at his passion, saith Saint Bernard; and therefore we should all of us, plus gaudere propter resurrectionem glorioſam, quam dolere propter paſſionem ignominioſam, now say with the Psalmist, sing we merrily unto the Lord our God, that hath turned our sorrow into joy, that we might sing one of the songs of Sion: and woe to that man that doth it not, quia indignum valde eſt ſi in eo die laudes debitas tacuerit lingua carnis, quo videlicet caro reſurrexit autoris, because it is a great indignity that our tongues should be silent, from giving praise to God on that day, whereon our Saviour rose from his death, saith Saint Gregory. And as we should rejoyce at the consideration of the Resurrection of Christ from the dead; so we should likewise rejoyce for the resurrection of our owne soules from sinne; for as Tobias said, what joy can I have, ſo long as I ſit here in darkeneſſe? so may we say of every sinner, what comfort can he have whiles he lives in sin? or what fruit can he have of those things, whereof he muſt be aſhamed, as the Apostle saith? And so much for our resurrection from sin.

Bernard de paſſione Domini. c. 46. p. 1236. k.

Gregor. hom. 21. in Evangel.

Rom. 6.

That the Resurrection of Christ is an assurance of our resurrection to eternall life.

Secondly, if we be the members of Christ, we shall assuredly rise from our graves, and from death, unto the resurrection of everlasting life; quia ut Redemptor noſter ſuſcepit mortem, ne mori timeremus, ita oſtendit reſurrectionem, ut nos reſurgere poſſe conſideremus, for as our Redeemer died, that we might not be affraid of death, so he rose againe, that we might be sure of our resurrection unto life; for if the head be risen, then surely the members, in their due time, must rise and follow after; but Christ our head is risen from the dead (as I have abundantly shewed unto you before,) and therefore it must be that we which are his members, shall also rise and follow after. And lest any man should say, ſperare de ſe non debet homo, quod in carne ſua exhibuit Deus homo, that man should not hope for that to himselfe, which that God and man performed in himselfe, S. Gregory answereth, that ſolus in illo tempore mortuus eſt, & tamen ſolus minime reſurrexit, although he died and was laid in his grave all alone, yet he did not rise againe alone, but he was accompanied with many others; to shew unto us, that as he died not for himselfe, so he rose not for himselfe, but for us that are his members.

And therefore, though heere we suffer all the miseries of this world, though our bodies be but ſemen terræ, & eſca vermium, the dust of the earth, and the foode of wormes, and though these bodies of ours should bee cast into the seas, and bee eaten of fishes, and those fishes should be caught, and should be eaten of men, and those men should be burnt to ashes, and those ashes cast into the seas, yet we may assure our selves, to our continuall comfort, and to our refreshment in all miseries, that God will collect us and raise vs up at the last day, and give unto every soule his owne body, and then make us like unto the glorious body of Iesus Christ. And so much for the first lesson, the lesson of Theorie, which these women, (and so likewise all men and women) must learne, and know, That Christ is risen from the dead, and therefore that we should rise from sin, and shall rise from our graves to eternall life.

1 Cor. 15.

CHAP. X.

What the women are commanded to doe, and why; and what ſpeciall leſſons we may learne for our inſtruction.

2 The lesson of practise.

How the Angell teacheth the women what they should doe.

FOr the second, that is, the lesson of practise, this Angell sheweth unto these women what they should doe, saying, ite, go your waies; why stand you here? and go quickly, without delay, for it is the Lords businesse, and curſed be they that do the worke of the Lord negligently; & dicite Diſcipulis, and tell his Disciples that Christ is risen from the dead; Tell his Disciples, first, quia vos ad prædicandum inferior ſexus, ad exigendum infirmior; because your sex is lesse able to preach, lesse constant to persevere, saith S. Ambroſe; secondly, because women must not teach; for to teach is a note of superiority, and women are bound to obey, and to learne at home of their husbands; and therefore I permit not a woman to teach saith the Apostle; thirdly,

Why the women were to tell the Disciples that Christ was risen. Ambroſ. in loc.

thirdly, that as man did raſhly beleeve the woman for his deſtruction, ſo he might now happily beleeve theſe women for his ſalvation; et ecce and behold, he goeth before you into Galilee, Galilee of the Gentiles; becauſe now the partition wall that was betwixt the Iewes and the Gentiles is broken downe, and the calling of the Gentiles approacheth neere: & quia tranſmigraverat à morte ad vitam, and becauſe now he had paſſed from death to life, and was to paſſe from this vaine and momentary life unto that joyfull and eternall happineſſe, he ſaith, behold he goeth before you into Galilee; becauſe Galilee ſignifieth tranſmigration, or a paſſage over from one place unto another. And ſo you ſee the ſumme of the Angels injunction unto the women, what they muſt doe; and from hence we may learne theſe ſpeciall leſſons for our inſtruction.

What we ſhould learne from the Angels inſtruction to the women.

First, that we muſt joyne practiſe unto our profeſſion, if we would be happie; for theſe two muſt never be ſeparated, but theſe things if you know, bleſſed are you if you do them, ſaith our Saviour; & yet it hath ever been the practiſe of Satan, to ſever thoſe whom God hath joyned together; and therfore in former times, he put out the light of the Word preached, that men might not know what to doe; and now when he ſeeth he can hide the light no longer, he gives you leave to know as much as you will, as much as Berengarius, who is ſaid to know as much as was knowable; but he laboureth that you ſhall doe nothing at all, but ſhew your ſelves juſt like the Grecians, which knew what was honeſt, but did it not, or like the Scribes and Phariſees, which ſaid and did not, ſaith our Saviour. But we ſhould conſider, firſt, that this is one of the chiefeſt ends why God gave his Lawes and his Commandements unto us, that we ſhould doe them; for had he given them onely to be preſerved, he might have lockt them up in iron coffers; or had he given them to bee talked of, he might have given them unto Iayes and Parrats.

First, It diſhonoureth God more then any other thing; his name is blaſphemed through them among the Gentiles, which beleeve not God; and therefore God ſaith, why takeſt thou my Lawes in thy mouth, whereas thou hateſt to be reformed?

Plutar. in Lacon.

1 God gave his Lawes not to be talked of, but to be kept. Practiſe onely proveth us Chriſtians.

Secondly, we ſhould know, that the practiſe of Chriſtianity is the onely argument to proove us true Chriſtians; for by this, Chriſt proved himſelfe to be the Meſſias; and it is moſt true which Iovinian ſaid of the Arrians and Orthodoxall Biſhops, I cannot judge of your knowledge and diſputations, but I can eaſily diſcerne your lives and converſations.

Thirdly, we ſhould remember that our actions are the beſt arguments, and the moſt unanſwerable Syllogiſmes to convert infidels; for Sozomenus tells us, that the godly life of a poore captive woman moved a King and many others to become Chriſtians, and Iulian writing to Arſatius, ſaith, that Chriſtiana religio propter Chriſtianorum erga omnes cujuſvis Religionis beneficentiam propagata eſt; the piety and the charity of Chriſtians did wonderfully cauſe the Chriſtian Religion to increaſe; and Maximinus ſaid, he could not chooſe but wonder to ſee how ſedulous the Chriſtians were in doing good.

2 A good life converteth others. Sozom. l. 7 c.

Baſil. l. de 40. Mart.

Euſeb l. 9 c. 8.

Whereas on the other ſide, the lewd life of thoſe that profeſſe Chriſt doth bring forth many ſower and bitter fruits; As

The bitter fruites of a bad life.

First, it diſhonoureth God.

Secondly, it proveth ſuch livers no Chriſtians.

Secondly, It proveth them to be no Chriſtians, becauſe the profeſſion of Chriſtianity is a profeſſion of works, and not of words.

Thirdly, It hindereth the unſetled mindes, to imbrace Chriſtianity; for when they ſee men, like Tuſſer that wrote well of husbandry, but was himſelfe the worſt husband that lived, or like Eraſmus Ruffian, that carried by the one ſide a good bottle of ſack, and by the other ſide a faire guilded Teſtament, ſuch as will heare much and talke more of Religion, and doe none of the works of God, how ſhall not this diſſwade the unſtable hearts from ever imbracing of Chriſtianity? It is reported that Lynacrus reading the Sermon of Chriſt in the Mount, and conſidering the converſation of men in the world, ſaid, either this is not Gods Goſpell, or we are not Gods people; and I pray God, that the faire-ſeeming-ſhewes of hypocriticall profeſſors, and their moſt vile and abhominable actions, be not the cauſe to kindle Gods fearefull indignation againſt us all.

Thirdly, it bindereth others to become Chriſtians.

Act.10.38.

And therefore beloved brethren, let us consider the Author of our profession, Iesus Christ, who went about doing good: let us consider his holy Apostles, and all our blessed Ancestors, how sedulous they were in the practise of Religion, whereby they have gained a good report, and became glorious in the sight of God and men, and let us imitate them herein, to doe good as they have done, and in all things to joyne practise unto our knowledge.

All men not fit for all purposes.

Secondly, we may observe from hence, that as these women were fit messengers, to tell the Disciples that Christ was risen, but not to preach the same unto the world; so many mon are sufficient for inferiour places, and to preach the shallower points of Divinity, points of morality, and popular exhortations, but are not fit Ducere in altum, to lanch forth into the deepe, and to treat of the higher mysticall points of Divinity; for as it is said of Davids Worthies, that they reached not unto the first three, so it may be said of us all, that many men may receive a measure of Gods graces, and yet not attaine unto the measure of many others; because God doth not give the same measure of grace unto all; but as in humane gifts, we finde that some had their memory so good, that to their last times they could repeate whole orations, and some that in their yonger yeares had their judgement so profound, that they could determine the hardest questions; so in the delivery of the Divine talents, whereby Theophylact understandeth πνευματικὰ χαρίσματα, spirituall graces, some have five, some have two, some but one; to note unto us that God granteth, not onely a superiority unto some above their brethren, in an higher kinde of a different grace, but also in a greater measure of the same grace; as the Spirit was doubled on Elisha, if not in respect of his Master Eliah, (as some thinke not) yet surely in respect of the other succeeding Prophets; and in the Schoole of Nebuchadnezzars inchanters, though they were all no doubt exceeding great Clerkes, yet Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego were found to be ten times better then the rest; and among these, Daniel sleeping was found wiser then his fellowes waking; so in the New Testament, Iohn Baptist was a Prophet, and more then a Prophet, and S. Paul spake languages more then all the rest of the Apostles; and therefore God doth not require all his servants, nay he will not have them all to adventure, or seeke to bring forth the like measure of fruit; for he was not angry with the slothfull servant, because that one talent had not gained ten talents, but because he hid his masters money, and had gained nothing at all.

Act.1.20.

1 Cor.14.18.

God expecteth not the like fruits from all men.

That we ought to follow Christ, and not to go before him.

Thirdly, we may observe from hence, that as Christ went before these Women and his Disciples into Galilee, and they all followed after him; So we should suffer Christ to go before us in all our waies, and not to runne our selves before him, where perhaps he never went, nor will goe; for it is the property of a Disciple to follow after, & not to precede or go before his master; and therfore we must not go into those places where Christ went not; nor dispute of those points which Christ taught not; for this is to go before him, and not to follow him.

That wee must passe from all worldly vanities, before wee can injoy spirituall blessings.

Fourthly, we may observe from hence, that as Christ passed from death to life, and from this world into Heaven; so must we, before we come to Christ, passe from our deadnes in sin unto the life of grace, and from the vanities of this worldly life unto a spirituall and a heavenly conversation; for as there was no possession of the Land of Canaan, untill there was a transmigration of the red Sea, out of the land of Egypt; so we can have no fruition of Gods presence, untill we have relinquished and passed over all the Egyptian vanities of this life, in our desires and affections at the least.

Revel.4.8.

And thus you have heard the office of this Angell here expressed, to serve Christ, to affright the souldiers, and to delight these women, to teach them, to direct them, and to preserve them in all their waies; for as they never cease to serve the Lord, so they never cease to preserve the Saints, untill they cease to serve their God; and therefore to use Saint Bernards exhortation, Quantum debet hoc verbum inferre reverentiam, afferre devotionem, conferre fiduciam? How ought this doctrine to move us, and worke in us reverence for their presence, confidence for their custody, and obedience unto God for so great an argument of his benevolence unto man, as to

to give his Angels charge over us; Et quam cautè ambulandum, and how warily ought we to walke seeing the Angels of God are ever present with us, when all the men of the world are absent from us?

It is reported of a godly Virgin, that being often sollicited by a gallant unto unlawfull lust, at last she yeelded that if he met her at such a place he should have leave to worke his pleasure with her: both came to the place appointed, and the place was full of people; then the mayden told him, that now if he pleased hee might use her as he would; he answered that now for shame he durst not do it in the sight of so many men and women; then she replyed, and thinkest thou that I dare do that in the presence of God and his holy Angels, which thou darest not doe in the sight of mortall men? and I wish every one of us did so, that is, to be ashamed to do those things in the sight of God and his holy Angels, which we are afraid to do in the presence of men; for they alwaies see us, though we see not them; they are about our beds, and about our paths, and spie out all our waies; and therefore as Marcus Drusius, when one told him he could build him an house of such a forme, as that no man might see what he did therein, answered, that he liked better of such an Architector which could build his house so, as that every one passing by might plainely see what was done therein; so I wish to God that every one of us would strive and labour so to live, as it becommeth us to do in the sight of God and of his blessed Angels.

Hieron. in vit. pat.

Psal. 139. 2.

Vellem paterem'us

And so we see the Resurrection of Christ fully and plainely shewed us to the eternall praise and glory of God, and to the endlesse joy and happinesse of all Christians, through the said Iesus Christ, To whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be ascribed all power and dominion, both now and for ever. Amen.

A Prayer.

O Blessed God, which gavest thine only Sonne Iesus Christ to suffer death for our sins, to descend into Hell to destroy our enemies, and to rise againe for our justification, and so to declare himselfe mightily to be the Sonne of God, and the true Saviour of all men; We most humbly beseech thee to raise us from the death of sin, from all our sins, and to give us grace to beleeve in thee, to be thankefull unto thee, and to serve thee in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life; that when we shall be laid to rest in our graves, we may rest in assured hope to be raised up by Christ, to live with him for evermore, through the same Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

The Analysis of the sixt Treatise.

- This Treatise sheweth
  - 1 The glory or ascention of Christ, which is handled,
    - 1 By way of exposition
      - 1 Person ascending, where is shewed foure sorts of ascenders,
        - 1 Angels.
        - 2 Divels.
        - 3 Men.
        - 4 God and Man Christ Iesus.
      - 2 The ascension is selfe is shewed, where is more fully expressed
        - 1 Person ascending, both in respect of his
          - 1 Humiliation, where is shewed
            - 1 That he was in heaven before he descended.
            - 2 The extent of his humiliation.
          - 2 His exaltation.
        - 2 Particular circumstances concerning his ascention, viz.
          - 1 Time.
          - 2 Place.
          - 3 Manner.
      - 3 The place where he ascended, into heaven, where is shewed that there is a three-fold heaven.
        - 1 Materiall.
        - 2 Spirituall.
        - 3 Supersubstantiall, where is proved that the body of Christ is locall.
    - 2 By way of application,
      - 1 For our consolation, which is twofold.
        - 1 That Christ in our flesh is gone to take possession of heaven.
        - 2 That being in heaven he is not unmindfull of us that be on earth.
      - 2 For our imitation, where is shewed
        - 1 The place from whence we must ascend.
        - 2 The meanes how we may ascend.
        - 3 The signes if we have ascended.
  - 2 The victory of Christ, which is understood,
    - 1 Passively, for all our enemies, hell, death, sinne, &c.
    - 2 Actively, for all those men that are delivered from sinne, and set at liberty to serve their God.

3 The

3 The bounty of Christ, where is shewed

1 What manner of gifts Christ giveth, free gifts, to exclude merit.

2. What gifts are here meant, where is shewed, that all gifts of God are either

1 Temporall gifts.

2 Spirituall gifts, and they are of two sorts, viz.

1 To edifie the Church, as

1 Ministers.

2 Gifts to Ministers, especially
1 Tongues.
2 Knowledge.
3 Charity.
4 Constancy.
5 Contempt of the world.
6 Perfect power, &c.

3 Ministers indued with these gifts.

2 To sanctifie our soules, which are

1 Common gifts.

2 Speciall gifts, which are

1 Faith, which is
1 Historicall.
2 Of miracles.
3 Temporary.
4 Justifying.

2 Hope, which is
1 Humane.
2 Divine.

3 Charity.

4 Providence.

5 Patience, &c.

3 How God bestoweth his gifts, viz.

1 The gifts for edifying the Church, he gives not alwais alike; but

1 In the beginning of the Church, visibly; where is shewed how the Holy Ghost appeared, viz.
1 Like a cloud.
2 Like fire.
3 Like a Dove.
4 Like wind.
5 Like tongues.
} And why?

Where is shewed the filling of the Apostles with the Holy Ghost, and foure signes of their fulnesse, and the effects thereof;

2 Now, and to the end, sufficiently, but with our great industry, where is shewed how we may know whether we have the gifts of God or not.

2 Gifts for the sanctifying of our souls, he gives by 1 Hearing the Word.
2 Receiving the Sacraments.
1 Baptisme.
2 The Eucharist.

4 To whom God bestoweth all these gifts; to whom it pleaseth him.

The ſixt

Golden Candleſticke,

HOLDING

The ſixt greateſt Light of Chriſtian

RELIGION.

Of the Aſcention of our SAVIOUR, and of the Donation of the HOLY GHOST.

EPHES. 4. 8.

Διὸ λέγει, Ἀναβὰς εἰς ὕψος ἠχμαλώτευσεν αἰχμαλωσίαν, καὶ ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

Wherefore he ſaith, when he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

The coherence of this verſe with what goeth before.

AFter that the bleſſed Apoſtle S. Paul had by many arguments proved unto the Epheſians, that they ſhould earneſtly ſtudy, and moſt carefully labour to preſerve the unity of the Church of Chriſt, he ſeemeth in the ſeventh Verſe to anſwer a certaine objection that might be made, viz. ſeeing the graces, the gifts and the offices which God hath beſtowed upon his Church, are ſo many and ſo manifold, ſo diverſe and ſo unequall, ſome having many graces, ſome but few, ſome one gift, and ſome another, how can it be that this unity can be ſo faithfully preſerved? Therefore the Apoſtle ſheweth that the diverſity and inequality of gifts is not only no hinderance, but is indeed a great furtherance to cheriſh and preſerve the ſame.

Why inequality of gifts doth further the unity of the Church.

1 Reaſon.

2 Reaſon.

1 Becauſe all theſe gifts do flow from the ſame fountaine, Ieſus Chriſt.

2 Becauſe they are all given and imparted for the ſame end and purpoſe; that is, to gather together the Church of Chriſt into the unity of faith.

The firſt reaſon he proveth out of this Propheſie of David, who ſpeaking of the the Messias triumphing over his enemies, saith, Thou art gone up on high, thou hast led captivity captive, and received gifts for men. And

The second reason he confirmeth at large in the Verses following, where he sheweth, that Christ gave some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers, and all to this end, that is, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the worke of the Ministery, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come into the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Sonne of God.

Two things contained in this verse.

And therefore we find contained in this verse, two especiall points.

1 A confirmation of the Apostles alledged reason, that all graces do flow from Christ, in these words, διο λέγει, Wherefore he saith.

2 A Propheticall prediction of the Messias, in these words, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

1 Point. That the Scripture is the best warrant for all Preachers.

For the first, I meane not to stand long upon it, I will only note this one thing, that all we the Teachers of Gods people, according to the example of this Apostle, nay of Christ himselfe, and of all Christs true Schollers, should not teach any positive point of doctrine, unlesse we can either directly, or by necessary consequence, prove and confirme the same out of the sacred Scriptures; for whatsoever hath not authority from the Word of God, Eadem facilitate refellitur quâ probatur, may as well be rejected as received, saith S. Hierom; and whatsoever is therein contained, it requires absolute faith without doubting; because, as Hugo Cardinalis saith, Quicquid in sacris literis docetur, veritas est sine fallacia; quicquid præcipitur, bonitas est sine malitia; quicquid promittitur, felicitas est sine miseria; whatsoever is taught in the Scripture, it is truth it selfe without fallacy, whatsoever is commanded, it is purely good without the commixtion of any evill; and whatsoever is promised, it is perfect felicity without the least jot of misery; and therefore S. Augustine saith very well, that, Sicut contra rationem nemo sobrius, & contra Ecclesiam nemo Catholicus, ita contra Scripturas nemo Christianus; as no man that is sober will speake against reason, no man that is a Catholike will kick against the Church, so no man that is a Christian will contradict any thing that is said in the Scriptures.

Hieron. in Mat. c. 23.

2 Point.

For the second, that is, the Propheste of David, we may observe these three speciall things.

Viz. 1 The glory 2 The victory 3 The bounty } of the Messias, and the Saviour of the world, Iesus Christ.

Or els, 1 The ascention of Christ. 2 The subjection of our enemies. 3 The donation of the Holy Ghost. } And

The whole Treatise divided into three parts.

First, the glory of Christ, or his ascention is set down in these words, When he ascended up on high.

Secondly, the victory of Christ, or the subduing of our enemies, is set downe in these words, He led captivity captive.

Thirdly, the bounty of Christ, or the sending downe of the Holy Ghost, is set down in these words, He gave gifts unto men.

The firſt part hath two Branches.

Branch 1.

BRANCH I.

CHAP. I.

Of foure ſorts of aſcenders, and how each one of them aſcendeth.

1 The aſcention of Chriſt, handled,

TOuching the firſt, that is, the aſcention of Chriſt, I will (by Gods help) handle it two wayes.

Firſt, by way of explication of the words.

Secondly, by way of application of the ſame unto our ſelves.

1 By way of explication.

And in the firſt reſpect we muſt conſider theſe three points.

Three points to be conſidered, touching the aſcention of Chriſt.

That is, 1 The Perſon aſcending, who he is.
2 The action or motion of the Perſon, going up.
3 The place, where he is gone, on high; for thou art gone up on high.

First, the Perſon aſcending.

Firſt, for the Perſon aſcending, the Pſalmiſt ſaith in the ſecond Perſon, aſcendiſti in altum, cepiſti captivitatem, acceptiſti dona Be-Adam; Thou art gone up on high, thou haſt taken captivity, and thou haſt received gifts for the ſonnes of Adam; and the Apoſtle here in the third perſon, ſaith, When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, & dedit dona, and he gave gifts unto men.

Who is that thou, or this he? Who is this King of glory, that hath aſcended up on high? and what a ſtrange thing is this, to find ſuch difference in the Scriptures? He received gifts, ſaith the Prophet; He gave gifts, ſaith the Apoſtle.

Iohn 3.

Haud bene conveniunt———

We may ſay with Nicodemus, How can theſe things be? For the difference betwixt the Prophets ſaying, he received gifts, and the Apoſtles ſaying, he gave gifts, I ſhall reconcile it hereafter, when I ſhall come to ſpeake of the third point, that is, the bounty of the Meſſias: and therefore it reſteth now that we ſhould diſcuſſe only of the Perſon, who he is that is here meant to have aſcended; for Bonaventure ſaith, that there be foure ſorts of aſcenders.

That there be feure ſorts of aſcenders.

Viz. 1 The Angels of heaven. 2 The divels of hell. 3 Men, both good and bad. 4 The God and Man Chriſt Ieſus. } For 1 Angels. Gen. 28. 12. To what end the good Angels do aſcend.

Iohn 1 46.

Who they be that ſhall ſee the Angels deſcending, for their comfort.

First, Iacob ſaw the Angels aſcending and deſcending upon a ladder, whoſe foot was on earth, and the top thereof reached unto heaven, carrying up our prayers and ſupplications, and preſenting them unto God, as Raphael did the prayers of Tobias, and bringing unto us the gifts and graces of God, as Gabriel did the Meſſage of ſalvation unto the bleſſed Virgin; not in reſpect of any office of Mediatourſhip, that they ſhould execute betwixt God and Man, but in reſpect of that ſervice which they are to do unto man, at the command of God; and therefore they are ſaid to aſcend and deſcend along the ladder; that is, through Ieſus Chriſt, for he is that ladder by whom we aſcend and climbe up to God, and through whom we receive all bleſſings from God; He is the way, the truth, and the life; the two ſides of this ladder are his two natures, the ſtaves are the properties of each nature, and the knitting of them together is that indiſſoluble union of theſe two natures in the unity of his Perſon.

Now when Iacob ſaw this viſion of Angels aſcending and deſcending upon this ladder, dormivit ſupra lapidem, it is not ſaid that he laid his hard head upon a ſoft pillow, but that he laid his tender head (for he was but a young man, and as yet never never uſed to any hardneſſe) upon a hard ſtone; to ſignifie unto us, that not thoſe which lay their hard hearts, and ſtiffe neckes upon beds of downe, and lie wallowing in all the pleaſures of this World; but thoſe rather which ſleepe in ſorrow and griefe for their ſinnes, and lye upon the hard and rough ſtone of true repentance, ſpending their time with Iohn Baptiſt in auſtere converſation, ſhall ſee the Angels of God deſcending downe to comfort them, and aſcending up to carry their ſoules like Lazarus into Abrahams boſome.

Secondly, Satan ſaid in his heart, I will exalt my ſelfe above the ſkies, and I will be like unto the moſt higheſt: and of this faſtidious and proud aſcender, Rupertus Tuicenſis writeth excellently and largely in his bookes De victoria verbi Dei, and Saint Bernard ſaith, that this wicked ſpirit doth emulate and imitate thoſe heavenly Angels, but moſt lewdly: quia aſcendit ſtudio vanitatis, deſcendit livore malignitatis, becauſe he aſcendeth in a vaine deſire of dignity to be equall with God, and he deſcendeth with an odious heart full of wrath and malignity to deſtroy ſilly men: & ſic mendax aſcentio, & crudelis deſcentio eſt, and ſo his aſcending is but a lying vanity, and his deſcending a cruell indignity: or elſe as Saint Gregory ſaith, they are ſaid to aſcend and deſcend, quia ad expugnanda alta, per cæleſte deſiderium corda ſubvenire, & de innocentis vitæ ſublimitate nos deponere appetunt, becauſe they ſeeke to overtop the Saints of God, and to deject their deſires from the ſublimity of heavenly things, and to bring downe their hearts and affections to be fixed on the things of this baſe and wretched World: and therefore, pro inani ſuo aſcenſu tam immane præcipitium fortius eſt, for ſuch vaine aſcending he hath obtained a moſt feareſull tumbling of himſelfe into the bottomleſſe pit of hell; Such is the reward of pride. But ſeeing their aſcending and deſcending is to ſubvert us, and to caſt us downe to hell, we ought to be very thankefull unto him (that is Ieſus Chriſt) at whoſe command the good Angels doe aſcend and deſcend, and continually attend upon us, to defend us from them, (as Saint Bernard ſaith) and to preſerve us in all our wayes, that we hurt not our foot againſt a ſtone.

Thirdly, men are ſaid to aſcend, and that both the good and the bad.

First, aſcendere malos, eſt de malo ad pejus proficere, the wicked are ſaid to aſcend when they grow worſe and worſe, and goe on from one wickedneſſe to another, untill they come to the height of all impiety: ſo the children of the firſt age after the flood, ſwelling up with pride, did lift up their hearts on high, and would build them a Tower, whoſe top might reach to Heaven; ſo the King of Babell ſaid, I will aſcend into Heaven, and exalt my Throne above the Starres of God; ſo the King of Tirus ſaid, I am a God, and ſit in the ſeat of God in the midſt of the ſea; ſo will that man of ſinne, that child of perdition (whenſoever he commeth) ſit in the Temple of God as God, and ſhew himſelfe that hee is God, if not directly by verball profeſſion, yet apparantly by reall uſurpation, when he ſhall undertake to forgive all ſinnes, to binde all conſciences, to diſpence with all lawes, to diſpoſe of all kingdomes, to command all Angels, and ſolely to open and ſhut heaven and hell at his pleaſure; and ſo doe all the children of pride, aſcend up on high to the very height of all ſinne; and this ſinne makes them like unto Lucifer the King of pride, and as the Poet ſaith, Matrona incedit cenſus induta nepotum.

It makes many a father and mother to weare their childrens portions upon their backes; it makes many a woman not with Eue to hide their ſhame, but with Ieſabell to hide their faces, which ſhould be their glory, under ſhamefull complexions of their owne compoſure, ſo that God himſelfe, if hee did not know their hearts, might hardly know thoſe vailed faces.

Nec tamen admiror, ſi vobis cura placendi,
Cum videant comptos ſecula noſtra viros;

And it makes not onely women to deny themſelues and their age to pleaſe men, but it maketh men alſo to deny their ſexe almoſt, to pleaſe women, and to ſpend more time in powdering their haires and perfuming themſelues, then they doe

2 Devills. Eſay 14. 13.

Bern in Pſal. qui habitat Ser. 12. How wickedly Satan doth aſcend.

Greg in lib. 1. reg. c. 27 pag. 279. c.

Bernard de aſcen. ſer. 4. p. 259.

3 Men.

1 How wicked men doe aſcend.

Greg in l. 1. reg. c. 15. p. 444. ſ to 1.

Gen. 11. 4. Eſay 14. 13. Ezech. 28.

How pride ſpoyleth many one.

Ovidius de medi. eam faci. t.

doe in the service of God, or of the Common-wealt', and German-like to goe in all attires, unlike to men; yea this sinne, as it made the inhabitants of heaven to become the citizens of hell; so it maketh many a Saint to become a Devill, and of the sonnes of God to become sonnes of Beliall: for as the Poet saith of beautifull persons,

Fastus inest pulchris sequiturque superbia formam;

You shall hardly finde a faire man or woman that is not proud; so I may as truely say,

Fastus inest justis sequiturque superbia sanctos.

There be not many Saints, but we may feare they are a little proud of their sanctity; for in our best goodnesse, if we be not carefully watchfull over our owne soules, Satan will seeke to make us doat in admiration of our own worth, and then presently he will stirre us up to proceed to the extenuation of others, and to say with the Pharisee, I thanke God I am not as other men, or as this Publicane. And of all ascenders and lifters up of themselues, there is none so bad as these; for as no devill to the holy devill, when he transformeth himselfe into an Angell of light; so no pride like this, to be proud of grace; and the devill rejoyceth as much to make a Saint proud, as to make a prophane man wicked.

To bee proud of goodnesse is the worst pride in the world.

Matth. 24. 15. And therefore as our Saviour saith unto the Iewes, When you see the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, then flie to the Mountaines; even so, when you perceive in your selues the least conceit of your owne worth and goodnesse, then doe you presently feare this lifting up, and flie to the mountaine of Heaven for grace, to escape the desolation of such high conceits; for as Orpheus had his wife Euridice granted him out of hell, upon condition that he should not looke upon her untill he had passed out of the confines of hell. But,

That wee should take head to bee proud of good things.

Flexit amans oculos, & protinus illa relapsa est;

He was so farre in love with her, that he could not containe from looking backe, and so she was presently taken backe againe: even so, if we, Narcissus-like, stand gazing upon our owne worthinesse, we shall find our best deedes but like the apples of Sodom, externally splendide and faire to the eyes, but being handled by God, or throughly tried by the touchstone of Gods Law, we should finde them hollowly defective, and every way impure in his sight.

Indeed it is Satans usuall course, either to hinder us to doe well, and to cause us not to fast, not to pray, not to give almes, not to doe good, or else if we doe them, to doe them that we may be seene of men, and to be proud of them; hee will be sure to thrust at every side, and to thrust sore at us, that we may fall: but we must carefully watch him in all his assayes, and especially in this; because as Optatus saith, Meliora inventa sunt peccata cum humilitate, quam innocentia cum superbia; it is better for a man to sinne and be humbled, then to be voyd of sinne, that is, of all the usuall sinnes of the world, and to be proud of his innocency.

Optatus in parab. pharis. & public.

And thus you see how the wicked doe ascend in pride, and as Claudian saith,

——— tolluntur in altum
ut lapsu graviore ruant. ———

Satan lifteth up wicked men to throw them down. Claudius Ruff. li. 1.

They are lifted up on high, to have the greater fall: and therefore, perniciosa haec ascentio, imo magis descentio est, à Ierusalem in Iericho, that is a most dangerous ascention, nay rather descention from Ierusalem to Iericho, to fall among theeves, and to be robbed and spoyled of all that we have; for these have not the silver wings of a Dove, but the waxen wings of Icarus to helpe them to ascend, and they are not exalted up by God, because they are not humble and meeke; but they are lifted up by the devill, because they grow great without goodnesse; and therefore as Icarus, (Icarius nomine fecit aquas) fell downe and was drowned, so will the devill bring downe the high lookes of the proud; for as the the Iacke-daw takes up a nut in her Bill, and flying on high, lets it fall on a rocke for to breake it, or as the Eagle deales with the Oiſter and Tortoiſe in like manner, (by which meanes Æſcilus dyed, as Valerius Maximus ſaith, becauſe the Eagle ſeeing his bald head, while in an open place he made his oration unto his auditors, thought it was a ſtone, and therefore letting fall the Tortoiſe out of her bill, that ſo falling upon the ſtone the ſhell might be broken, it fell upon his head and killed him;) ſo the devill deales with theſe men, he lifts them up as he did Simon Magus, to make them flie in the aire, and then, as he did to the ſaid Magus, he throwes them downe to breake their neckes; and therefore it had beene good for many they had never beene thus lifted up.

Valerius Maximus l. 6. 12.

It is reported of one Gaufredus Monachus Clarevallenſis, that having refuſed a Biſhopricke in his life time, he appeared after his death unto his chamber-fellow, and ſaid that he did well in refuſing that Biſhopricke which his friends would have had him to accept; quia ſi in numero Epiſcoporum fuiſſet, in numero damnatorum eſſet, becauſe that if he had beene of the number of the Biſhops, he ſhould now have beene of the number of the damned, not that Biſhops muſt be damned, God forbid, there have bin and there are very many of them exceeding good, learned, painefull, and upright men, (though I muſt unfainedly confeſſe, I have ſeene ſome, not as I would wiſh;) but that if he had aſpired to that dignity, by that unlawfull meanes as (it is moſt likely) it was offered him; for otherwiſe it had beene moſt lawfull for him, both to deſire it, and to accept it; for he that deſireth the office of a Biſhop, deſireth a good worke, ſaith the Apoſtle; or though he might lawfully have attained unto it, yet if he finding himſelfe, though fit enough to be a Monke, yet unfit to be a Biſhop, had accepted the ſame; then certainely it muſt needs have followed, that if more mercy were not ſhewed then he deſerved, he muſt needs be in the number of the damned: and it would be well for many, if they did not riſe to fall; for of ſuch aſcenders Bonaventure ſaith, that quantum aſcenderunt per ambitionem in mundo, tantum deſcendent per damnationem in inferno; by how much the higher they have aſcended by their ambition in the World, by ſo much the greater ſhall be their damnation in hell; and ſo of theſe the Prophet David ſaith, in a myſticall ſenſe, becauſe literally I confeſſe it ſpoken of ſea-faring men, quòd aſcendunt uſque ad Cœlum, & deſcendunt uſque ad Abyſſos; they are lifted up to the Heavens, and downe againe they fall into the bottomleſſe pit: but they doe not deſcend in the ſame manner as they aſcend; for they do aſcend moſt willingly, but they ſhall be caſt downe moſt violently into that place of utter darkenes; Thou foole, this night they ſhall take away thy ſoule from thee; even as a Sergeant doth a priſoner into his goale againſt his will: and they doe aſcend by degrees, by little and little, and by the ſpace of forty, fifty, or ſixty yeers; but they ſhall ſuddenly fall away, like the lightening, whereof our Saviour ſpeaketh, I ſaw Satan as a lightning falling downe from heaven, that is, ſuddenly and fearefully they ſhall fall to ruine: Diabolus itaque & homo, uterque aſcendere voluit, ſed præpoſterè, hic adſcientiam, ille ad potentiam, ambo ad ſuperbiam, and ſo both the Devill and wicked men would each of them aſcend, but prepoſterouſly, men to be wiſe, the devill to be great, and both to be proud, ſaith Saint Bernard, for which they ſhall both fall downe to hell.

The ſtory of Gaufred Clareval. that refuſed a Biſhopricke Boſquier. de monomachia.

Bonavent. de aſcen. ſer. 4. p. 199.

The higher we aſcend, the greater will be our fall if we be not good.

Luke 12.

Bruard in flor. p. 2090. c.

Secondly, good men doe aſcend aſwell as the evill and wicked; and though they doe not aſcend after the ſame manner, yet they doe it the ſame way (ſaith Saint Bernard) as the wicked doe; becauſe as the ſame way leadeth unto the City, as goeth from the City, and by the ſame doore we enter into the houſe, as we goe out of the houſe; ſo if we would returne unto the truth, and aſcend up into Heaven, we neede not ſeeke any other new way; but by which we have deſcended and fallen downe from Heaven, we muſt aſcend and climbe up into Heaven; and as Cacus dragged his cattell backewards into his cave, ſo we, veſtigia retrorſum, muſt retire back by the ſame ſteps as we have proceeded forward; but you know we fell by pride, when we would be like Gods; and therefore

2 How the godly doe aſcend.

Idem de gradibus humilit. p. 972.

Gen. 3. 5.

fore we must ascend by humility, we must know our selues to be nothing, and worth nothing, this is the way, and there is none other but this; qui aliter vadit, cadit potius quam ascendit, and he that would by any other way ascend up to Heaven, he doth surely fall from heaven; because it was enacted by the eternall Law of the God of heaven, that every one which exalteth himselfe, shall be humbled, and he that humbleth himselfe shall be exalted: And therefore Christ, having not as he was God, any way whereby he might ascend, because nothing is higher then God, and God cannot be higher then he is, by his humiliation and descention he found how to ascend; for comming to be incarnate, and to suffer death, that we should not suffer eternall death, therefore God exalted him, and gave him a name above all other names: to teach us, that by humility onely we may ascend to eternall felicity: Goe thou and doe thou likewise, humble thy selfe, if thou wouldest be exalted into heaven, and because thine humility is full of pride, lay hold upon the humility of Iesus Christ, for that is onely perfect; and therefore it is that onely that can bring thee to perfection.

The way to heaven is humility.

4 Christ.

Fourthly, we reade, that Christ ascended and was lifted up; and that, as we find, three speciall times:

Christ ascended 3 speciall times.

that is, { 1. Vpon the Crosse, when the Iewes insulted over him.
2. From his Grave, when the Devils trembled at it.
3. Into glory, when all the hoste of heaven reioyced at it, and said; Lift up your heads, O yee gates, and be yee lifted up ye everlasting doores, that the King of glory may come in; for this is he that hath troden the wine-fat alone, and is worthy of all glory and honour for evermore.

And so you see how many sorts there be of ascenders; and you see, I thinke, how fearefull is the ascention of Satan and of wicked men, and how glorious is the ascention of the Saints: And we finde that as S. Bernard saith, omnes cupidi sumus ascentionis, exaltationem concupiscimus omnes; we all desire to be exalted, we all would faine be lifted up to heaven: but who shall teach us the way thither, lest we should be seduced by him that fell from thence, and so seeking to ascend up into heaven, we should fearefully fall downe into hell? Who (saith Saint Bernard) but he, of whom it is written that he ascended up on high, that ascended up above all heavens? we must learne the way of him if we would ascend to heaven; for he came downe from heaven, and he is gone up into heaven, and now he sitteth in heaven upon the right hand of God.

Bernard. de ascen. ser. 4 pag. 199.

Iohn 3. 13.

CHAP. II.

That Iesus Christ the Sonne of God, is he that is meant by the Prophet David and Saint Paul, to have ascended up on high.

Quest.

BVt who is he, of whom it is written, that he ascended up on high? for many ascend as you heare, but which is hee that is here meant? I confesse the 68. Psalme, wherein these words are first written, is literally to be understood, not of any triumph for the slaughter of the hoste of Senacherib, which was done in the time of King Hezekias (as the Iewes doe most fabulously dreame) when the very Title of this Psalme, that ascribeth it unto David, doth sufficiently confute this vanity; nor yet for any of the victories of David, which he obtained against his bordering enemies, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Idumeans, and the Philistines, (as some would have it;) but of that great and glorious pompe, which was then done and shewed, when King David with great joy and triumph did bring the Arke of the Covenant into the hill of Sion; and therefore these words, thou art gone up on high, doe signifie that the Arke which formerly had laine in an obscure place, & was transported from one place to another, was now ascended and seated in

Resp.

Psalme 68.

Literally these words were spoken of the Arke of the Covenant.

Mollerus in Psalme 68.

in a most illustrious and conspicuous place, even in the Kingly Pallace; and these words, thou hast led captivity captive, to signifie those enemies which formerly had spoyled and wasted divers Countries; but now being vanquished by King David, were led captive in this triumph, (for so it was the manner of those times, as Plutarch doth excellently declare in the life of Paulus Æmilius;) and the other words, thou hast received gifts for men, doe signifie those spoyles that were freely offered for conditions of peace, and were triumphantly carried about in this pompous showe, for the greater solemnity of the same; and then, (as the manner was among the Chiefetaines, when they triumphed, Bellica landatis dona dedisse viris, to bestow warlike gifts upon worthy men) gifts were bestowed on severall men, in severall maner, as Sigonius sheweth; Yet I say that mystically this Psalme is an ἐπινίκιον or a tryumphall song, penned by King David, upon the foresight of Iesus Christ arising from the dead, and with great joy and triumph ascending up into Heaven, and thence sending his holy spirit unto his Apostles and Disciples, and, having overcome all his enemies, collecting by the ministery of his Preachers his Church and chosen servants together, and so guiding and defending them heere in this life, untill he doth receive them into eternall glory; for so the authority of Saint Paul interpreting them, and all other Divines with one consent, doth compel us to understand them, and to know that that pompous shew and triumph of King David, was but the præludium and type of this triumph of our Saviour Christ, whereof the Apostle speaketh in this place; and it was an usuall thing for the Prophet David, in all his chiefest and most glorious acts, so to behold the Proto-type, that is, the Messias, whose type he knew he was, and so to accommodate all his actions unto what the Messias should doe; that all men might perceive these things to be done, not through any humane invention, but as he was moved and guided by the inward inspiration of Gods Spirit, and that for the instruction and edification of the whole Church, when by these outward perspicuous acts of David, as by certaine visible lectures, all men might see, and reade those things that should be done by Iesus Christ: And therefore I say, that the person prophecied of by King David, and here spoken of by Saint Paul to have ascended upon high, is our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, who having vanquished and overcome sinne, death, Hell, and all our enemies, did most gloriously ascend up to Heaven in the presence of all his Apostles and Disciples, and thence sent the holy Ghost to repleni sh and fill their hearts with all spirituall gifts and graces: and this will more fully appeare unto us out of the second point, which is the action or the motion of this person, set downe in the word ascendit, when he ascended up on high.

Plut in vita Pauli Æmil.

Sigon. l. 2 de antiquo iure pro.

Mystically these words were first spoken of Christ ascending up into heaven.

All the chiefest acts of David were types of Christ.

CHAP. II.

A fuller declaration of the person ascending, and of the time, place, and manner of his ascention.

YOu have heard of the person ascending, who hee is, Iesus Christ: we are now to consider of his ascention, out of this word ascendit, when hee ascended up on high: but first wee must observe, that our Apostle out of this Word, he ascended, doth collect both the humiliation and the exaltation of Christ.

2 Of the ascention. S. Paul collecteth two things out of the words he ascended.

First, his humiliation in the 9. v. for that hee saith, hee ascended, what is it but that hee descended first into the lower parts of the earth? wherein the Apostle would have David, when hee foresp ake of the glorification and the ascention of Christ into Heaven, to have foreseene his humiliation and descention from Heaven to bee incarnate and made man.

First, the humiliation of Christ.

Secondly, the exaltation of Chriſt.

Secondly, his exaltation in the tenth verſe, he that deſcended is the ſame alſo that aſcended farre above all heavens; for theſe two verſes are read by a parentheſis, and are added by the Apoſtle, for the fuller explication of thoſe hidden myſteries, that are included in the word he aſcended. and 1 Touching Chriſts deſcention 2 Points handled.

Firſt, touching the deſcention, the Apoſtle ſetteth downe two things,

§1. The deſcent it ſelfe, that he deſcended.
§2. The extent of his deſcent, into the lower parts of the earth.

1 The deſcent. Chriſt firſt deſcended, that is, was incarnate, before he could aſcend.

The firſt ſheweth us that he was firſt in heaven, that is, according to his Godhead, or elſe he could never have deſcended out of Heaven, and that he deſcended to be incarnate and made man before the man Chriſt could aſcend up into heaven; and therefore the Prophet David fore-ſeeing the aſcention of the man Chriſt muſt needs foreſee the humiliation of the Sonne of God to be made man.

2 The extent of it.

The ſecond is a point more controverted; for firſt, ſome doe expound the lower parts of the earth, to ſignifie his mothers wombe; becauſe the deſcent of the Sonne of God, is nothing elſe but his incarnation, and that was done in his mothers wombe; and becauſe the Prophet David uſeth the like ſaying of himſelfe, I was formed beneath in the earth, that is in my mothers wombe; ſecondly, others will have this phraſe to ſignifie his abode and converſation here among men; thirdly, others will have it to ſignifie the ſtate and condition of the dead, as if the compariſon were made betwixt thoſe parts of the earth, wherein the living doe inhabit, and that place wherein the dead are buried; and ſo they doe expound that place of Eſayas, that he was cut off from the land of the living, and ſo caſt into the land of the dead, which they ſay, the Apoſtle underſtandeth by the lower parts of the earth: and fourthly, others ſay, that he deſcended into the place of the damned, not to ſuffer, becauſe that was finiſhed on the Croſſe, nor to fetch any Fathers out of Lymbo, but to ſignifie and to ſhew, not onely by words, but alſo by his preſence, that ſeeing by his death and Paſſion, the wrath of God was appeaſed, Satan was to have no more power over the Elect, which hee held captive, that he was now made Lord of all, and that all power was given unto him, and a name above all other names, and not onely to declare the ſame unto them, but alſo to ſubdue them, and to ſpoyle principalities and powers, and as my Text ſaith, to leade captivity captive: And this is the expoſition of moſt of the ancient Fathers; for mine owne part I am of Zanchius minde, that in the word deſcendit, all theſe foure expoſitions may be comprehended; becauſe he deſcended, into his mothers wombe, to be converſant here among men, into his grave, and into Hell; and our very Creede expreſſeth all theſe foure; for he was conceived by the holy Ghoſt, that is, in his mothers wombe, there is the firſt; hee was borne of the Virgin Mary, and he ſuffered under Pontius Pilate; there is the ſecond; he was dead and buried, there is the third; and he deſcended into Hell, there is the fourth; and theſe be foure degrees of his humiliation: and this the Apoſtle ſeemeth plainly to underſtand by the antitheſis, by the coherence, and by the ſcope of the words; becauſe he ſaith, that he aſcended to the higheſt part of Heaven, and therefore this alſo that he deſcended into the lower parts of the earth, is literally to be underſtood, that he deſcended into Hell; becauſe no place of the earth is lower then Hell.

In inferioribus terra.

Eſay 53. 8.

Iohn 19. 30.

Coloſſ. 2. 15.

Zanch. in Eph. c. 4.

That Chriſt deſcended into Hell.

Secondly, Touching the exaltation of Chriſt, Saint Paul ſetteth downe two things,

2 Touching the exaltation.

2 Points. 1 The perſon.

§1. He deſcribeth the Perſon aſcending, he which deſcended.
§2. He expreſſeth the action, he aſcended. And

He which aſcended is the very ſame perſon which deſcended.

Firſt, he ſaith, that it is he which deſcended that hath aſcended, that is, he which was made man, which ſuffered and was buried, he aſcended; and who is he, but God the Sonne, the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity? for ſo our Saviour ſaith, I went forth from the Father, and I came into the world, and againe, I leave the world, and I goe to the Father; and therfore it is the very ſelfe ſame Son of God, and none other, which both deſcended and aſcended.

And ſo by theſe few words, we finde two great hereſies quite overthrowne; firſt, firſt, of them which ſay, he brought his body from heaven, becauſe the Apoſtle doth not ſay, he which aſcended deſcended (though this be true, being truely underſtood) for he aſcended God and Man, which ſo, did not deſcend, but as God alone; therefore he ſaith, he which deſcended, he aſcended; ſecondly, hereby is overthrowne the hereſie of Neſtorius, which ſaid, our Saviour conſiſteth of two perſons; for, if he which deſcended is the very ſame that aſcended, then it is apparant that by his deſcention, that is, by the aſſumption of our nature, he is no other perſon then he was before, but ſtill remaineth one and the ſelfe ſame perſon, and that the humane nature doth adde nothing unto the Sonne of God, for the conſtituting or perfecting of his perſon; for otherwiſe he that aſcended had bin another, and not the ſame which deſcended; for he had deſcended a ſimple perſon, and aſcended compounded, he had deſcended an imperfect perſon, and aſcended perfect, which is moſt hereticall either to ſay or thinke: And this is the cauſe, why we affirme that the perſon of Chriſt cannot be ſaid to be compounded of two natures, tanquam ex partibus, as of two parts, but as he was before the aſſuming of our nature, ſo alſo now he is ſtill a moſt ſimple and a moſt perfect perſon, bearing our nature, as one weareth on his garment, but never to put it off againe, becauſe it is aſſumed into the vnity of his perſon: and ſo Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſt deſcended like a naked man, and when he aſcended, hee aſcended the ſame perſon, but clothed with our fleſh: and therefore, as he is not another man that taketh on a garment, ſo the Sonne of God is not another perſon, becauſe he tooke upon him the garment of our fleſh: and if the humane nature aſſumed, did neither change, nor perfect, nor compound the perſon of the Sonne of God, becauſe he which deſcended, is the very ſame that aſcended and none other, then by the ſame reaſon it cannot be ſaid, that Chriſt tooke man upon him, that is, a humane perſon, as Neſtorius taught.

That in Chriſt there cannot bee two perſons.

Chriſt ſtill remaineth a moſt ſimple perſon, that is not compounded.

But therefore he underſtood not the ſame, becauſe on the one ſide hee held that true philoſophicall principle, that the actions are of the perſons, and not of the natures; and on the other ſide, he held another principle (which is alſo true, if it be truely underſtood) that of contrary effects there muſt bee contrary efficient cauſes; and he ſaw that in Chriſt there were divers and contrary actions; and therfore he did thence cõclude, that in Chriſt there muſt needs be divers perſons, whereof the one ſhould be paſſible and the other impaſſible; and ſo he made that hee which deſcended was not the ſame, but another that aſcended; for he conſidered not, quòd idem ὑποστατικὸν poteſt diverſa & pugnantia operari ſecundum diverſas in eo naturas, that the ſame ſubſiſtent or perſon may worke divers and contrary acts, in reſpect of the divers natures that are in it, as a man according to his ſoule doth underſtand, and according to his body he doth not underſtand; in reſpect of his ſoule he is immortall, and in reſpect of his body hee is mortall; and ſo through his ignorance he hath abuſed theſe true philoſophicall principles (being truely underſtood) to denie the truth of the Scriptures, and to wrong the perſon of the Sonne of God; but the Fathers truely explaining the ſaid principles, did confute his error and confirme this truth, that he which deſcended, is the very ſame that aſcended, and none other.

How Neſtorius was deceived about the perſon of Chriſt.

But from hence it is apparant, that the word deſcendit, is not to be taken in the ſame ſence, as the word aſcendit; for he deſcended as God, and God filleth all places; and therefore it is not phyſically to be underſtood, of any locall deſcent; but for his exinination and the aſſumption of our fleſh: but he aſcended as God and Man; and therfore it muſt phyſically be underſtood of a locall aſcent; and whole Chriſt is ſaid to aſcend, by reaſon of the communication of the properties and the union of both natures into one perſon.

Secondly, Saint Paul having fully deſcribed, and ſhewed the perſon aſcending, that is, he that deſcended, expreſſeth the very act or motion, in this word aſcendit, he aſcended up on high; touching which, we muſt conſider theſe three eſpeciall points,

Secondly, the action or aſcending of Chriſt.

Three things to be considered.

That is, 1. The time 2. The place 3. The manner of his ascention:

All which are fully shewed by Saint Luke in the first of the Acts; for

Acts 1. 3.

First, he saith, that he shewed himselfe alive after his Passion, by many infallible proofes, for the space of forty dayes: touching which number, why he remained on earth just forty dayes, many men have collected many mysteries: Moses was in the Mount with God forty dayes; the children of Israel wandered in the wildernesse forty yeeres; Elias fasted forty dayes; Ninive had time of repentance forty dayes; our Saviour fasted forty dayes; and many other like examples might be found of this just period of forty dayes: and I will not here search into the reason of these things, he that will, let him look into Bosquierus, but I wil onely note those two reasons, why he continued so long on earth after his resurrection, which Saint Luke setteth downe unto us:

1 The time when Christ ascended.

Bosquierus de monomachia Christi.

Why Christ continued 40. dayes on earth after his resurrection.

Eusebius l. 4 de præparat. Evang.

First, to proove the certainty of his resurrection; therefore he saith, that hee appeared unto them.

Secondly, to instruct his Apostles, in faith, hope, charity, and all other points concerning the Kingdome of God, as Eusebius noteth; and the Evangelist plainly expresseth, saying, that he was seene of his Apostles forty dayes, speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdome of God.

But here we must observe, that for this space of forty dayes, he was not with his Apostles and Disciples, after the same manner as he was with them before his Passion; for that now he was not continually conversant with them, but did onely at some times appeare unto them.

Where Christ was all the forty daies.

If then you demand where he was for that space, while he was not with his Disciples, whether in the Wildernesse, as some doe thinke, or in the terrestriall Paradise, which Bellarmine affirmeth to remaine still, though Pererius saith it was quite abolished by the deluge, or in what place he secluded himselfe, I will no wayes venture to determine; for I will alwayes hold that excellent rule of Prosper; Quæ deus occulta esse voluit, non sunt scrutanda, quæ autem manifesta fecit, non sunt negligenda, ne & in illis illicitè curiosi, & in his damnabiliter inveniamur ingrati; What God hath concealed, they are not to be searched, and what he hath declared they are not to be neglected; lest that in the former we shall be found to be unlawfully curious, and in the latter most dammably careless.

Prosper de vocat. gentium.

Secondly, For the place from whence he ascended, it is said, that hee went from Galilee to Bethanie, from Bethanie to Mount Olivet, and from Mount Olivet, unto Heaven; Galilee signifieth transmigration, and Bethanie is interpreted the House of obedience, to shew that as he descended by reason of our disobedience, to suffer for our sinnes, and to give us an example of obedience thereby, parare nos mansioni, to prepare us for heaven, so by reason of his most perfect obedience, in fulfilling all righteousnesse, He ascended into Heaven: Parare mansionem nobis; to prepare a place for us; or else Bethanie may signifie the House of affliction, to shew that by many afflictions and tribulations we must enter into the Kingdome of God. And he ascended from Mount Olivet, because he would use no miracle, while the strength of nature served; and whosoever doth otherwise, tempteth God, rather then trust in God.

2. The place from whence he ascended.

Acts 14 12.

Thirdly, For the Manner, Bonaventure observeth, that he ascended,

3 The manner of Christ his ascending. Luke 24. 51. 1. Observation.

First, Blessing his Apostles, as the Evangelist saith, While he blessed them, he was parted from them; which is an exceeding comfort unto us the poore distressed Ministers of Iesus Christ; for though the world hate us, and curse us, and say all manner of evill against us, yet behold Christ parting, left his blessing with us, to defend us against all their malice: And he blessed them with his hands lifted up; to teach us, that in our prayers we doe with Moses fight with God, we hold his hands, and suffer him not to strike us with the sword of vengeance; and this is the Victory which overcomes our God, even our prayers; and to teach us that when our mouth prayeth to God, we should likewise moove our hands to doe the the workes of God; and further to teach us, that by this manner of praying with our hands spread and lifted up, we should professe Christ crucified, as Prudentius saith.

Prudent. hymno 6.

Secondly, He was not suddenly snatcht from them, as Elias, nor secretly taken away, as Enoch was; Sed videntibus illis; but in the presence of them all, his Apostles and Disciples, he ascended up to Heaven.

2 Observation.

Thirdly, That as he ascended, the cloudes received him out of their sight: to shew that he was the Lord of all his creatures; he had already trampled upon the earth, walked upon the Sea, vanquished Hell, and subdued all infernall things under his feet; and therefore now the cloudes received him, and the heavens are opened to make way for this King of glory to enter in.

3 Observation. Acts 1. 9.

Fourthly, He ascended, in voce tuba, in the sound of a Trumpet, not on earth sounding Hosanna, but in Heaven crying Haleluiah: for God is gone up with a merry noyse, and the Lord with the sound of a trumpet, saith the Psalmist. So,

Bern. Ser. 2. de ascens p. 182.

4 Observation.

Psal. 46. 5.

You have heard how he went, and you shall see him comming after the same manner, saith the Angell.

Christ will come to judgement in the same manner as hee went to Heaven.

First, With the sound of a trumpet, that shall raise the dead: and this great trumpet of God is the voyce of the Angels, a voyce fearefully crying, Surgite mortui, & venite ad judicium; Arise ye dead and come unto judgement; a voyce that alwaies made Saint Hierome to quake and tremble, whatsoever hee was a doing.

Secondly, He shall come in the clouds, and we shall be taken up into the clouds; that as we see the cloudes protect us from the heate of the Sun; so we may be overshadowed from the heate of the wrath of God, by that true cloud Iesus Christ.

1 Thes 4. 14.

Thirdly, He shall come, though unlookt-for by the wicked, as a theefe in the night, yet so apparantly, that he shall be seene of all the world, and with a great company of Angels; Et cum milibus sanctorum; and with thousands of his Saints, as the Apostle saith, for the chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of Angels, and the Lord shall be among them as in the holy place of Sinay.

2 Pet 3. 10.

Psal. 68. 17.

Fourthly, he shall come with a blessing to rejoyce the hearts of his Elect, when he shall say unto them, Come ye blessed of my Father, receive the Kingdome that was prepared for you, before the beginning of the world. And so much for the motion, or his ascending up.

Matth. 25.

Chap. IIII.

The place into which Christ ascended.

3 The place where he ascended. Augustin. de Civ. Dei. p. 179. b.

THirdly, We are to consider, terminus ad quem, the place whether hee ascended. Quò (inquit Augustinus) nisi quò scimus, quò eum Iudæi non sunt sequuti? Where he is gone, but where we know, and where the Iewes shall not be able to follow after? Quia in crucecxaltatum irriserunt, ideo in cœlum ascendentem non viderunt; Because they mocked him being nailed on the Crosse, therefore they saw him not when he ascended up to Heaven: and where is he gone, saith the Prophet David, but on high? for, thou art gone up on high, that is, above all Heavens, saith the Apostle.

And therefore by this one little sentence, we find three damnable Heresies brought to death.

Three Heresies confuted. 1 Heresie. 2 Heresie. 3 Heresie.

First, Of them which said his body vanished in the aire, before he ascended into Heaven: for he ascended above all heavens.

Psal 19. 5.

Secondly, Of them which said he ascended into he Orbe and Circle of the Sunne, because it is said, in salem posuit tabernaculum suum: He hath set his Tabernacle in the Sunne; which was the opinion of the Hermians, and the Passinists, as both Nazianzen and S. Augustine doe affirme; for here we see, hee is gone above all Heavens: and therefore above the Orbe of the Sunne, and they mistake that place of the Psalmist, which is, In them he hath set a Tabernacle for the Sun, and not, he hath set his Tabernacle in the Sun.

3 Heresie.

Thirdly, of them which teach an ubiquitary heaven, because he is ascended above such heavens.

Aristl. l. 1. de cœlo.

Object. But then it may be objected, that if he be ascended above all heavens, then is he in no certaine place, because (as Aristotle saith) beyond heaven, there is no place.

Sol. I answer, that the Scripture maketh mention of three heavens.

That there be three heavens.

First, of the ayre, as the fowles of heaven.

Secondly, of the celestiall Orbes, as the starres of heaven.

Thirdly, of the receptacle of the blessed soules, which is called the Kingdome of heaven.

And this we must understand to be either { 1 Materiall / 2 Spirituall / 3 Superstantiall } heaven.

1 Christ ascended above the materiall heavens in three respects.

First, for the materiall heaven, he is said to ascend above the same.

1 Respect.

First, in respect of glory; because the Body of Christ is more glorious than any Materiall heaven.

2 Respect.

Secondly, in respect of the continency; because in nature it is infallible, that contentum superius est continente, the thing contained must be higher than the place containing.

3 Respect.

Thirdly, in respect of his blessed soule; because the soule of Christ is more blessed than all things else whatsoever.

2 Christ ascended above the spirituall heavens.

Secondly, for the spirituall heavens, that is, all Angelicall or Heavenly perfections, he is said to ascend above them all.

1 Respect.

First, in respect of perfection; because the body of Christ is more noble, and more excellent than any creature, not in regard of his corporall substance, but in regard of the hypostaticall union, because it is united unto the Godhead.

2 Respect.

Secondly, in respect of his humiliation, because he hath vilified himselfe below all things; therefore he is worthily exalted above all things.

3 The substantiall heaven.

Thirdly, for the superstantiall heaven, that is, God himselfe, and the place of God, he is said, in respect of his Person, to ascend into the same; not that the humane nature is ascended to the equality of the Godhead; for he is still inferiour to the Father, and shall be still subject to the Father, as touching his manhood; but that the Person of Christ, God and Man, sitteth on the right hand of God, that is, doth rest and reigne, exalted above all things, usq; ad æqualitatem Majestatis Dei, to be in all things equall unto the Majesty of God, as S. Augustine expoundeth it, Descendit enim quò inferius non decuit, ideò ascendit quò altius non potuit; For he descended so low, as it was not fit for him to go lower, and therefore he ascended so high, as it was not possible for him to go higher, saith S. Bernard.

Christ higher than all created things.

And therefore Christ is ascended higher than all created things whatsoever.

Psal 8.6.

First, in respect of the place; because above all heavens.

Heb. 1.

Secondly, in respect of power; because God the Father hath subjected all things under his feet, that is, as well things in heaven, as things in earth.

Thirdly, in respect of dignity; because he is made more excellent than the Angels.

Fourthly, in respect of this equality, even with God himselfe.

That Christ in respect of his manhood, is in the highest part of the Empyrean heavens.

And so we see how (Christ in respect of his person, is above all heavens; because he is an immeasurable and infinite Person, which the heaven of heavens cannot containe: and therefore must needs be every where; but in respect of his humane nature assumed, he is in the highest part or place of the Empyrean heaven, which is the seat of the blessed soules; for if he were in no place, then much lesse should he be in the earth, in the Sun, or in every place; but S. Augustine doth most excellently shew, that Ubi corpus ibi locum esse necesse est; that wheresoever a body is, there must needs be place; because if we take away dimensions and places from bodies, bodies, they shall be no where: Et si nusquam erunt, non erunt; and if they be no where, they shall not be at all: And S. Peter doth as plainly shew this truth, when he saith, that the heavens shall and must containe him, (that is, in respect of his Manhood, for in respect of his Godhead it cannot) until the restitution of all things: and so we professe in our Creed, that he sitteth on the right hand of God, from whence he shall come, (that is, in respect of his humanity; for his Deity being every where, cannot be said to go or to come any where) to judge both the quicke and the dead. And therefore it is most certaine that the Body of Christ is in a place; that is, in the highest part of heaven; which Oecumenius calleth τὸ ἀναλῆμπτικὸν τοῦ πεμφθέντος, The receptacle of him that is sent; and this the Fathers, S. Augustine, Cyrillus Alexandrinus, Vigilius, Theodoret, and others, have most fully shewed and proved unto us, and that for these three speciall ends.

Aug in Ep. ad Dardan.

Acts 3.21.

That the body of Christ is in a place.

Aug. l. de fide & symbolo c. 6. Cyril in Levit l. 9. Vigilius contra Eutych l. 4.

First, that we might be assured, our Saviour Christ remaineth still a true and a perfect man in glory.

1 Reason.

Secondly, that we might know where to seeke, and where to find our Saviour Christ: Nam Pontifex noster non utiq; in terrâ quarendus, sed in cœlo: For our High Priest Iesus Christ is not to be sought for in earth, but in heaven, saith Origen: and therefore, as S. Augustine said of Mary Magdalen; Quid quæris in tumulo, quem adorare debes in cœlo? Why seekest thou him in the grave below, whom thou shouldest adore in the heavens above? So much better might I now say unto many men; alas, why seeke you Christ here on Earth in Bread and Wine, and I know not where; when as he is no where to be found in respect of his Manhood, but in heaven? There is the place where he sitteth on the right hand of the Majesty of God.

2 Reason. Orig in Levit.

Aug de tempore Ser. 133.

Thirdly, that we might know, where we shall be; for so our Saviour saith, Father I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am.

3 Reason. Iohn 17.24.

Obiect. But against this it may be objected, that Christ himselfe saith, No man ascendeth unto heaven, but he that descended from heaven, the Sonne of man which is in heaven: And therefore how shall we have any hope to ascend up unto heaven?

Iohn 3.13.

Sol. S. Augustine answereth, that we are not therefore to despaire, because he ascendeth alone, that is, by his proper strength and power; for we shall be elevated and taken up by the power of Christ, who came therefore down from heaven, that he might carry us up into heaven, that were falling down into hell: Or as the same S. Augustine saith, we ought therefore to be united unto him, that so it might be but one Christ which descended and ascended; he descended as the head of his Church, and he ascendeth with his whole body, which is his Church; he descended naked, and he ascendeth clothed with our flesh; and he descended as a husband without a wife, but he ascendeth married unto his Church: and so he and us is but one; one body, one flesh: Unitas nos compaginat uni; Our unity with him makes us one with him: and therefore they only shall not ascend, which are not, nor will not be made one with him: but our conversation is in heaven, and our life is hid with Christ in God: and therefore he might well say, No man ascendeth, but he that descendeth, if you understand it of Christ mystically; that is, of him wholly, of him and all his members, because none but his members shall ascend into heaven.

That we must be united to Christ, if we will ascend where Christ is.

Aug. in Psal. 122. p. 391.

And so you see the place where Christ ascended, into heaven: Quomodo autem sit in cœlo corpus Dominj, curiosissimum est quærere; But to inquire how the body of Christ is in heaven, whether sitting or standing, whether naked or clothed, which Clemens Alexandrinus denieth, because the Saints in heaven shall have no need of clothing, or how he ascended into heaven, whether in a purple robe, as Frederus Nauseа supposeth out of Esay, whose meaning is far otherwise than Nauseа thinketh; and many other curious questions, they are farre fitter to be buried in silence, than to be once determined by any modest Christian; because as S. Augustine saith, Non est nostræ fragilitatis secreta cœlorum discutere; sed est fidei nostræ de Dominici corporis dignitate sublimia & honesta sapere: It is not Rupertus de offic. divin. c. 8.

Aug. l. de fide & symb.

Esay 63.1.

Curious questions ought not to be discussed.

possible for our weaknesse to understand the secrets of heaven; it is enough that by faith we believe and conceive worthy things, and that holily and modestly concerning Christ.

Idem quo sup. de sign & symb.

And so much for the explication of the first Part, which is, of the Ascention of our Saviour.

Branch II.

Chap. V.

Of the application of this Doctrine of the Ascention of Christ unto our selves, both in respect of consolation and imitation.

Branch 2.

SEcondly, for the application of this doctrine unto our selves, you must note that it may serve for a double end.

2 The ascention handled by way of application. The doctrine of Christs ascention may serve for a double end.

viz. { 1 Of consolation. 2 Of imitation. } And

1 Of consolation two ways.

First, our consolation is likewise twofold.

{ 1 That he is gone to heaven. 2 That he is not unmindfull of us on earth. } For

1 Way. Aug. in Act.

First, Dum naturam humanam sydera inter Christus importavit, credentibus cœlum patere posse monstravit; Whereas Christ hath carried our humane nature unto heaven, he hath thereby shewed, that now heaven is open for all believers, saith S. Augustine; O then how much should we rejoyce hereat! Because now onely we see in deed, which before we only saw in hope, the Chyrography and hand-writing of our damnation blotted out, and the sentence of our corruption quite changed, for now we see this nature, to whom it was said, Dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return, to have gone to heaven, and there to raigne without end.

Heaven opened for us.

Gen. 3. 19.

Neither are we only made possessours of heaven, but we do receive more ample, and more excellent things, by this most ineffable glory of Christ, than we have lost by that inveterate envy of the divell: Nam quos diabolus de paradiso ejecit, hos Dei filius in cœlo collocavit; For whom Satan hath cast out of Paradise, Christ hath brought them unto everlasting happinesse.

Leo in Serm. de ascens.

Secondly, as it is our comfort, that he hath given us possession of heaven, so it is as great a comfort unto us, that he being in heaven, is not unmindfull of us, that are here on earth: Indeed Pharaoh's butler forgat Ioseph, when he ascended unto his masters favour, and so it is an usuall thing in the world, for all great men, that have beene raised up of nothing, to be most unmindfull of their poore friends and acquaintance; they hold it a point of policy to know them not, or at least to looke strangely and sternely upon them, whereupon it is most truly said,

2 Way. That Christ in heaven forgetteth not his servants here on earth.

Asperius nihil est humili, cum surgit in altum:

The course of beggars raised.

None so disdainefull, none so proud as they that have ascended up on high, from meane estate; but it is not so with Christ; for though he be gone up on high from the meanest among men, to be equall with God; yet there he is not unmindfull of us, but sitting on the right hand of God, he maketh continuall intercession for us, and sendeth his Spirit to comfort us; for though corpus in stultis cœlis, he hath placed

placed his body in heaven, yet majestatem non abstulit mundo, he leaves his Spirit, which filleth all places here on earth: for loe (saith he) I am with you untill the end of the world, that is, to deliver us from all miseries, and to give us all those good things, that he seeth good for us: And therefore, though Abraham should forget us, or Israel be ignorant of us, or as Mardocheus said to Queene Hester, If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, and dost nothing in the world for us, yet shall there inlargement and deliverance arise unto the Iewes from another place: Even so, though we should feare men will forsake us and forget us, and do nothing for us, either to deliver us from any troubles feared, or to helpe us unto any good desired; yet this our good God, which neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, though he be ascended to heaven, yet he will defend us on earth, and he will lift us up out of the mire, if we put our trust in him, he will send us comfort out of some other place: Feare you not, but stand still, and see the salvation of God which he will shew unto you.

Mat. 28. ult.

Hester 4. 14.

Exod. 14. 13.

Secondly, as the resurrection of Christ is our hope, so his ascention is our glorification; Si ergo rectè, si fideliter, si devotè ascentionem Domini celebramus, ascendere debemus cum illo; and therefore if we do rightly, if we do faithfully and devoutly celebrate and make a right use of the ascention of Christ, then must we labour and strive to ascend with him: and if, by reason of the infirmity of our flesh, we are so detained and kept back, that we cannot ascend as we would to be where he is; yet let us endeavour to follow after, passibus amoris, & affectu cordis, with the best paces of love, and the most earnest desires of our hearts: And indeed it is not the lifting up of our eyes, nor the holding up of our hands, that is the right ascending into heaven; for this may be, as it is many times, meere hypocrisie, even as the witch of Endor lifted up Samuel to deceive Saul, so doth this witch hypocrisie cause many a one, to lift up their hands and eyes to heaven, to deceive the world, and to make us believe they are true Saints, whereas indeed they be very divels; but we must have sursum corda, our hearts lifted up; for this is that chiefest place of man, which both God and the divell laboureth most of all to attaine; for God saith, Sonne give me thy heart, and lift up the same to heaven; and so the divell seeks but the heart, if riches increase, set your hearts upon them, and therefore the heart of man is called by Macarius θρονος τῦ Θεῦ, the Throne of God, or els θρονος τῦ Σατανᾶ, the Throne of Satan; for if we lift up the same to God, and set our affections on the things that are above, then are our hearts the Throne of God; but if our love and affections be on the things of this world, then are our hearts the seat of the scornfull, and the habitation of divels.

2 Of imitation.

That in heart and affection we should alwaies ascend to heaven.

Pro. 23. 26.

Psal. 1. 1.

And therefore, that we may the better learne how to ascend and to lift up our hearts to God, I will desire you to consider these three things.

{ First, Terminum. / Secondly, Modum. / Thirdly, Signum. } That is,

Three things to be considered touching our spirituall ascention into heaven.

1. The place from whence, and unto what we must ascend.
2. By what meanes we shall raise up our selves unto God.
3. The signe whereby we may know whether we have ascended any way towards heaven or not.

1 From whence we rise.

First, the place from whence we must ascend, is this world, behold, saith Christ, I leave the world, and I go to the Father; so if we would go to Christ, we must leave the world, and never envy at the prosperity of them, quorum tectorum gloria attenditur, labes autem animorum non attenditur, whose outward glory we do see, but whose inward miseries we do not see. And the place where we must ascend is, in altum, unto the Kingdome of heaven, where the eye hath not seene, and the eare hath not heard the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

2 By what meanes we rise.

Secondly, the meanes how to raise our selves from this valley of miseries unto the height of heauen, is by casting from us all the things that may presse us down, and assuming the things that may help us up: And you know that whatsoever is heavy

Nothing is ſo heavy as ſin.

heavy preſſeth down, and we know that there is nothing ſo heavy upon the ſoul as ſinne, this is like a talent of lead, it makes the whole world to reele to and fro like a drunken man;

Atlas ea ipſe laborat;

Mat 27.46.

And it was ſo heavy upon Chriſt his ſhoulders, that in the garden it made him to ſweat the drops of bloud, and upon the croſſe it made him to cry out, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? And therefore, if we would aſcend to heaven,

2 Kings 2.13.

then as Elias did throw down his mantle, and as the blind man in the Goſpell did caſt off his beggars cloake when he would run to Chriſt, ſo muſt we caſt off the mantle of hypocriſie, and diſrobe our ſelves of all the beggarly rags of ſinne, or els they will preſſe us down to hell.

Pſal.55.6.

And as we know, ſin is that weight which keeps us downe, ſo we know wings are the beſt meanes to help us up; and therefore David prayes that he had wings like a dove, that he might flie away and be at reſt; and Chriſt himſelfe is ſaid to have fled ſuper pennas ventorum, upon the wings of the wind; ſo muſt we; we muſt get us wings, if we will aſcend to heaven.

Bern. in Sir. de aſc.

But what are thoſe wings that will carrie us thither? they muſt not be (like Icarus his waxen wings) the wings of pride and ambition, but as S. Bernard ſaith, they muſt be

What are the wings wherby we aſcend to heaven. See my Sermon of the Dove-like wings.

1 Meditatio, Conſideration.
2 Oratio, Prayer.
} For

Meditatio quid deſit docet, & oratio ne deſit obtinet; meditation ſheweth us what we want, and prayer obtaineth whatſoever we want: but we never know our eſtate, becauſe we never conſider in what eſtate we are, and we have not grace, nor goodneſſe, becauſe we ask not.

And S. Auguſtine ſaith, theſe wings muſt be

1 The love of God.
2 The love of our neighbours.

And it is not unlikely that love ſhould carrie us up unto God, becauſe God is love, and love brought downe God unto men.

Huc me ſydereo deſcendere fecit olympo,
Hic me crudeli vulnere fixit amor.

Aug. in Pſal.83. p.376.d.1.

And therefore no marvell that love ſhould carie us up into heaven; wherefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, that by love we either aſcend to heaven, or deſcend to hell; Quia amando Deum aſcendis in cœlum, & amando ſeculum deſcendis uſq; ad abyſſum, becauſe by loving God we aſcend to heaven, and by loving the world we deſcend down to hell.

But S. Gregory ſaith, theſe wings are

1 The contempt of wordly things.
2 The deſire of heavenly things.

And this may well ſtand with S. Auguſtines ſaying, becauſe (as the ſame S. Gregory ſaith) tantò ab inferioribus disjungimur, quantò ſuperioribus delectamur, by how much the more earneſtly we love heavenly things, by ſo much we are aſcended and ſequeſtred from earthly things. And therefore if you would aſcend,

1 Ioh.2.15. Col.3.2.

then love not the world, nor the things of this world, but ſet your affections on thoſe things that are above: and becauſe our life is juſt like a clocke, that unleſſe his waights be alwaies winded up, will ſoone ſtand, therefore we muſt be ever winding up our affections, and weaning them from theſe worldly things, and with Noahs dove, never ſuffer the ſoales of our feet to reſt, untill our hearts and ſoules returne to him that gave them us.

3 The figures. How we may know whether our hearts aſcend to heaven or not.

Thirdly, for the figues whereby we may know, whether we have aſcended or do aſcend towards heaven or not, I might ſhew you many; but now take this for all; if things above our heads ſhew greater unto us than they did before, and things beneath us leſſer, that is an apparent argument, that we aſcend and grow higher and higher; for ſo S. Gregory ſaith, if a man were aloft in the clouds, it would appeare unto him, quam abjecta ſunt quæ jam alta videntur, how baſe are the the things of this earth, which to a man on earth do seem so great; for then he should see mountaines no bigger than mole-hils, and the Sun which before, while he was on earth, did seem but instar pilæ pedalis, like a football, he should now find it to be a great & immense glorious body; for all bodies above him would seem greater, and all below him would seeme lesser: Even so, if our hearts and affections be ascended up to heaven, then surely the things of this world do seem unto us, but as they are indeed damnum & stercora, dung and drosse, or as nothing and worth nothing, as Nazianzen saith; and the things of heaven are the onely desires of our hearts, and the delights of our soules: but if folia venti & lilia agri, the vanities and the pleasures of this world, the Titles of Honour, and the confluence of wealth be the desires and delights of our hearts, then certainly we are fast bound in misery and iron, we are fastened and fettered here on earth, and it may be with golden chaines, but fast enough from ascending up to heaven. Phil 3.8.

I will not judge of any: by this rule you may all judge your selves, if you do highly esteeme of the preaching and Preachers of Gods Word, if you make much of them that feare the Lord, and love good men, and a good conscience, and make none account of this world, nor of the things of this world, then is your heart ascended up to heaven; but if not, Nudus humi jaces, Thou lyest poore and miserable, fettered here in earth, a slave and captive of the divell, and hast need to cry and call for Christ to lead captivity captive, Which is the second part of my Text.

And so much for the ascention of our Saviour Christ.

The second part.

Chap.

Of the victory and triumph of Christ over our enemies, of our deliverance from them, and of our restoring into the service of God againe.

2 The victory of Christ.

Secondly, touching the victory and triumph of Christ, set downe in these words, Thou hast led captivity captive, we must understand, that this is taken two wayes.

That is, { 1 Passively. 2 Actively. }

And I say first passively, because our enemies must be vanquished before we can be delivered: and therefore

1 Passively. How Christ overcame death, hell, sin, and Satan.

First, this phrase may be taken passively, for the world, death, and hell, and all other enemies of mankind, which Christ hath conquered and led captive, that they should not raigne and rule over his servants any more.

And thus S. Augustine doth expound it, saying, Quid est captivavit captivitatem? vicit mortem; mortem procuravit diabolus, & ipse diabolus de morte Christi est captivatus; What is he led captivity captive? but he overcame death: for the divell had procured death for sinne, and now the divell himselfe is captivated by the death of Christ. For as Victors were wont to do, to lead in triumph those tyrants that oppresse their subjects, or those enemies that they had vanquished, being being fast bound with chaines, with their heads and feet bare, for their greater shame and reproach; so the Psalmist alludeth unto the same, when he saith, Thou hast led captivity captive; and the Apostle doth more clearely expresse it, when he saith, that Christ having spoiled Principalities and Powers, hath made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it.

Col.2.15.

Quest. But here it may be demaunded, how are they captivated, when as the divell compasseth the earth like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devoure; and so doth the world still oppresse us; our flesh lusteth against the spirit, and death still raigneth over us all?

1 Pet 5.8.

Sol. I answer, that Christ hath destroyed their power, he hath taken away their strength, and he hath quite subverted the kingdome of sinne and Satan, and taken away the sting of death: and yet they compasse us about, not as having any power over us, but as a lion tied will teare us in pieces, if he can catch us within his clawes; so will sin and Satan, if we yeeld unto them; for though Christ overcame all our enemies, yet he hath not quite taken them out of our wayes, but left them as it were alive, though bound, that we might still beware to come within their reach, if we would escape their teeth; and therefore we say that sinne is so taken away, that it doth not raigne over the Saints, though perhaps through their negligence, it doth often wound them; so Satan is bound, though like a bridled horse, he often fumes against us, and sometimes bites us too, if we beware not of him; and so death is swallowed up into victory, and the sting thereof is taken away, so that it can never hurt the Saints of God, though it layes them still into a sleepe, because they shall all awake at the last day.

1 Cor.15.54.

How the wicked are still in their enemies hands.

But if sinne, and Satan, and the lust of the flesh have such power over us, as that the sin is no sooner suggested, but we are presently delighted with it, and are led by the same, as an oxe unto the slaughter, carried as it were by a silken thred, very easily to commit the same, without resistance; then certainly our enemies are not captivated, but do still rule and raigne over us. It is a fearefull and a dolefull case, to live under the government and subjection of a tyrant, who, Dionysius like, will give men to be meat unto his horses, or, Nero-like, will cause his servants to commit immane cruelties; and yet sinne is worse than these; because it causeth us to do fearefull and most odious acts, and then it gives us as meat, like fagots to be eaten and devoured of hell fire: And yet behold the wofull state of a sinfull man; for he is the slave of sinne, bound for hell, and subject to the divell; and yet for all this, he rejoyceth as a foole that goeth to the execution place, and he cannot indure the man that speaketh against his master the divell, but his desire is, to live still in his captivity.

That it is a most lamentable thing to live under the tyranny of sinne.

And this sheweth, that his enemies are not captivated; for if the world were subdued unto us, then could it not so easily command us, if sin were captivated, then could it not so often overcome us, and if Satan were bound, then could he not so easily prevaile against us: and therefore, though these enemies are so captivated, that they can no wayes hurt the godly; because they have no power over them, to make them either to delight in sinne, or to desire the vanities of this world; yet they are still loose, and they do still rule over the children of disobedience. And the beholding of the lives both of the Saints and sinners will sufficiently shew this truth unto us, that they are so captivated, as that they are not able to touch the one, and yet so free and so powerfull, as that they do raigne and rule as tyrants over the other. Behold an usurer, and a drunkard, a whoremonger, and such like, how Satan leads them as his slaves, and transformeth them from men to be very beasts; but if you look into the lives of the Saints, you shall see that neither the pleasures of sinne, nor the vanities of the world, nor yet all the power of darkenesse can once move them, or at least remove them from their most holy purposes, because Christ hath overcome all their enemies, and hath led captivity captive.

The Saints are freed from all their enemies.

2 Actively.

Secondly, this phrase may be taken actively, for them that were held captive by Satan, and were delivered out of his hands by Iesus Christ, and so freed from the bondage and the slavish service of sinne, and reduced into the glorious liberty of the Sonnes of God: and thus S. Auguſtine expounds it, ſaying, Ipſos homines qui captivi tenebantur appellavit captivitatem; that by captivity he underſtandeth thoſe men that were captives to the divell; and ſo their captivity is happy, becauſe they are taken for their good, even as Chriſt ſaid unto S. Peter, from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men; Captivati ergo quia capti, they are therefore captivated, becauſe they are catched, and put under the ſweet and eaſie yoke of Chriſt: and ſo they are delivered and made free from the ſervice of ſinne, whoſe ſlaves and captives they were before, and they are made the ſervants of righteouſneſſe: and therefore in this captivity, in this ſervice, and under this yoke, Non ſunt milia plorantium, ſed milia latantium, there is none that weepeth, there is none that mourneth, but we do all rejoyce and ſing the ſongs of Sion: Becauſe the Lord is amongſt us as in the holy place of Sinai.

of

Rom. 8. Chriſt deliverеth us from Satan, & placeth us in his own ſervice.

Pſal 68.19.

But they that are ſtill ſo held by ſinne, and ſuch ſlaves unto their luſts, as that they do no works of righteouſneſſe, they are not as yet freed by Chriſt, nor taken away from Satan; for they that are catcht by Chriſt, and delivered from the bondage of the divell, have taken upon them the yoke of Chriſt, and they do find that eaſie and light, that as a man is able to run, which is unlooſed from his bands wherewith he was tied, and unburthened from that waight wherewith he was preſſed downe, ſo they are able to run the way of Gods commandements, when God hath ſet their hearts at liberty. And therefore they that find themſelves unwilling or unable to do the ſervice of Chriſt, ſurely they are not yet reſcued from Satan, nor put under the yoke of Chriſt; for here you muſt note that they are not ſo delivered from the captivity of Satan, as that being freed from him, they may freely go, and do what they liſt; but as the very phraſe ſheweth, Thou haſt led captivity captive; they are taken away from the captivity of Satan, and from the ſervice of ſinne, and put under the yoke of Chriſt, to do ſervice unto God, that is, they are captivated and taken for the ſervice of Chriſt: becauſe this is the rule of warre; Preſerve thou me, and I will ſerve thee; ſave me from the tyrant, and I will be thy ſervant. And therefore if they be not captives unto Chriſt, that is, if they do no ſervice unto God, they are ſtill captives unto Satan, and Chriſt as yet, hath not led this captivity captive.

Pſal. 119.

We are not ſo freed from Satan, that we may do what we liſt.

And ſo all men may know hereby, whether they be captivated unto Chriſt or not; for if their underſtanding be captivated to yeeld unto the divine truth, many times contrary unto the rules of humane reaſon; and if their deſires and affections be only placed on heavenly things, to do what pleaſeth God, and not what is pleaſant unto fleſh and blond, then are they taken into the ſervice of Chriſt; but as that man can be hardly ſaid to be taken into the ſervice of any one, if he doth no ſervice unto his maſter, nor any thing that is pleaſing or acceptable unto him; even ſo they cannot be ſaid to be taken into the ſervice of Chriſt, that apply no time to do the will of Chriſt.

He that ſerveth not Chriſt, is not freed from Satan.

And thus you ſee how Chriſt hath vanquiſhed and triumphed over all our enemies: he overcame the world, he bound the divell, he ſpoiled hell, he weakened ſin, he deſtroyed death, he walked upon the ſeas, he roſe out of his grave, he contemned all honours, he aſcended into paradiſe, he opened the gates of heaven, and he ſitteth on the right hand of God, ruling and raigning untill he hath put all his enemies under his feet.

1 Cor. 15.25.

And ſo much for the Victory or Triumph of Chriſt.

The third part.

CHAP. I.

Of the speciall ends why Christ ascended into heaven, and of the gifts which he giveth to edifie the Church.

3 Of the bounty of Christ.

FIrstly, touching the bounty of Christ, set downe in these words, and he gave gifts unto men, we must first reconcile the difference betwixt the Prophet and the Apostle about the same; for David saith, Thou hast received gifts for men, and S. Paul saith, he giveth gifts to men: And I answer, that if we understand it literally, David received gifts, which for feare of his power were freely offered unto him, and if we understand it mystically of Christ, we find the saying of both to be true; for the Apostle speaketh of the things which Christ doth as God, sending forth the Holy Ghost, and bestowing gifts on men; and the Psalmist speaketh of him according to that which the same Christ doth in his body, which is his Church. Thus no doubt (saith S. Augustine) but as he is persecuted in his Church, so accepit in membris quæ dona membra ejus accepiunt, he received and receiveth gifts in men; for whatsoever is done to them that believe in him, the same is done to him: or els we may say, that the Sonne of God as he was man, received those gifts from his Father, which he was afterwards to distribute, and to give unto his Church; for so we read, that he being exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which we now see and heare; and so the originall word which the Psalmist useth, signifieth to receive that which we must presently distribute, saith Mollerus: and therefore the difference is soone ended, and the matter in both is true, he received gifts, and he gave those gifts to men; for we find (as Bonaventure tels us) that our Saviour ascended for foure speciall ends.

Aug. in Psal. 67. p. 288. a 2.

Acts 2. 33.

Mollerus in Psal. 68.

Christ ascended for foure speciall ends.

1 End.

First, to receive his kingdome, as himselfe intimateth unto us, Luke 19. 12.

2 End.

Secondly, to make us the more earnestly to long for him; Quia abijt & occultat se Deus, ut ardentius quaratur à nobis, because God doth therefore hide himselfe from us, that he may be the more earnestly sought of us, saith S. Bernard.

3 End. Bern. in Cant.

Thirdly, to prepare a place for us; for though in respect of Gods purpose, it was prepared for us before the beginning of the world; yet in respect of the effecting and bringing to passe the said purpose, it was specially prepared for us by Christ; because he removed all hindrances, and made way for us to enter into glory, foure speciall wayes.

That is,
1 By appeasing his Fathers wrath.
2 By cleansing our consciences from dead works.
3 By opening unto us the gates of heaven; and 4 By making continuall intercession for us, as Bonaventure speaketh.

4 End. Ioh. 16. 19.

Fourthly, to send down his holy Spirit unto us; for so our Saviour saith, It is expedient for you that I go away; Quia nisi dederitis quod amatis, non habebitis quod desideratis; for unlesse I go away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you; for now (saith Tertullian) Gratum quoddam commercium inter cœlum & terram existit celebratum, a most gratefull exchange, and a friendly loving bargaine was made betwixt heaven and earth, that to the inhabitants of heaven should be given the flesh of Christ, and to us on earth

Tertul. de carne Christi.

should

ſhould be beſtowed the comforts of Gods holy Spirit; and ſo the Spirit of God ſhould remaine with us on earth, and our fleſh ſhould dwell with them for ever in heaven; and then all things to be common betwixt us eternally; and therefore he did not ſend his Spirit unto us before he had aſcended into heaven, non propter impotentiam, ſed quia habuerunt corporalem præſentiam, not in reſpect of any impotency that he could not doe it, but becauſe we had his corporall preſence; and becauſe as the raine doth not deſcend untill the miſt and dew doe firſt aſcend; ſo the gratious raine of Gods Spirit, did not fall upon Gods inheritance to refreſh it when it was weary, untill this fruit of the wombe, which was as the dew of the morning had firſt aſcended into heaven; but as when that little cloud like a mans hand, did riſe out of the ſea, there was a ſound of much raine, ſo when that humble fleſh of Chriſt was aſcended out of this world into heaven, then he gave gifts unto men.

Why Chriſt would not beſtow his gifts on men before his aſcention.

1 Kings 18.

But what are theſe gifts which he giveth, Saint Auguſtine ſaith, it is his holy Spirit; Tale donum qualis ipſe eſt, ſuch a gift as himſelfe is; for he gave himſelfe, and he gives a gift equall to himſelfe, becauſe the gift of Chriſt is the Spirit of Chriſt; but here the Apoſtle ſaith, he gave gifts, and not a gift; and therefore though I do confeſſe, that this holy and bleſſed Spirit is the author and fountaine of all gifts, by whom we have remiſſion of ſinnes, ſubjection of our enemies, and all other gifts of grace and glory ſealed unto us; yet I ſay that the Apoſtle herein meaneth not ſo much the Spirit himſelfe, as the gifts and graces of his Spirit. And therefore that we may the better underſtand the fullneſſe of this point, of the bounty of Chriſt, we muſt conſider theſe foure ſpeciall things.

Aug. de verbis Domini p. 63. b. 1 to. 10.

Foure points to be conſidered.

Videlicet { 1. What manner of gifts they are. 2. What gifts are here meant. 3. How he doth beſtow them. 4. On whom he doth beſtow them. } And

For the firſt, we muſt know that they were gratuita, free gifts; ſo the words, dedit, & dona, he gave them, and he gave them as gifts, doe ſufficiently declare; or otherwiſe, ſi præmemeruiſti tum emiſti, & non gratis accepiſti, if thou hadſt done any thing to deſerve theſe gifts, then hadſt thou bought them, and not freely received them; and God had ſold them, and not given them; and ſo they had beene præmia, non dona, rewards for thy good deedes, and not gifts of his meere grace; but this point is ſo cleere that I needs not ſtand on it; Freely you have received, ſaith our Saviour, freely give, for every one may take of theſe waters of life freely, and may have theſe gifts, like Eſayas milke, without money or moneyes worth.

Firſt, that the gifts of God are free gifts.

Mat 10. 8.

Eſay 55. 1.

For the ſecond, we muſt note that the gifts of God are either { 1. Temporall. 2. Spirituall. } And Secondly, the gifts of God are of two ſorts.

First, The temporall gifts he gave unto all ſorts of men, as well before as after his aſcention; for we muſt note that every thing which we have is a gift that we have received from God, becauſe (as Saint Iames ſaith) Every good thing, and every perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the Father of lights.

1 Temporall gifts

All that wee have is from God.

Secondly, the Spirituall gifts of God are of two ſorts, and they are given for two ſpeciall ends.

2 Spirituall gifts.

Videlicet { 1. To edifie the Church. 2. To ſanctifie our ſoules. } And

First, thoſe gifts which he gave to edifie the Church, the Apoſtle ſetteth downe in the eleventh verſe, ſaying, He gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors, and Teachers, for the perfecting of the ſame, for the worke of the Miniſtery, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt; wherein wee ſee that by the gifts whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in theſe words, are underſtood either,

1 The gifts that Chriſt beſtoweth to edifie his Church. Epheſ. 4 11.

1. The Ministers of the Church and Preachers of Gods Word.
Or
2. The gifts wherewith the Ministers are indued; or rather, as I take it.
3. Ministers indued and qualified with such gifts as are necessary for the gathering together of his Church, which are specially,

Gifts requisite for Preachers.

The gifts
1. Of Tongues.
2. Of Knowledge.
3. Of Charity.
4. Of Constancy and Perseverance.
5. Of Contempt of all worldly vanities.
6. Of perfect power.

} And which are most excellent gifts and graces, of more worth and greater value, then the world can conceive.

First, languages and readinesse of speech.

First, The gift of tongues, that is, that as by the confusion of tongues the world was divided at the building of Babell; so by the helpe of the Preachers tongues the world might be reunited and made one sheepe-fold in the building of Gods Church. Secondly, that these men might not offend in their tongues. Thirdly, that they might be the better able to teach profound and heavenly doctrine, which they that want the tongues or languages cannot so easily attaine unto. And fourthly, that none might be able resist the words of their mouthes, as our Saviour saith, I will give unto you a mouth, or tongue, which your adversaries shall not be able to withstand.

Luke 12.11.

Secondly, Knowledge. Iohn 16.13. Perfecta virtus non est sine cognitione veritatis. Bernard.

Secondly, the gift of Knowledge, whereby they might know all truth, not of politicke and state matters, but of all truth necessary for this office; to edifie the Church, which is the chiefest knowledge that we should aime at; or else all truth every way, because they should know him which is all truth, that is, Iesus Christ, and I desire to know nothing else; I will be contented to be accounted a foole in all things else, so hee will give mee this gift onely, to know him alone.

Thirdly, Charity. 1 Cor. 8.1. Hugo de S. Vict. misc. l. 1. c. tit. 73.

Thirdly, the gift of Charity; Quia quærentes verum & non bonum non inveniunt summum bonum; because knowledge without charity puffeth up, and the seeking to know the truth, and not labouring to be good, will never bring us to the chiefest good; and because of all men we are most hated and slandered, and have all occasions offered us to make us hate all wicked men; therefore God diffuseth this gift of love and charity into our hearts, that notwithstanding all our indignity, wee doe still love them better then they doe love themselves, and doe spend our whole time to doe them good, and are ready to lay downe our lives for the brethren.

Fourthly, Constancy.

Fourthly, the gift of Constancy and perseverance; because as knowledge and every other gift without charity is nothing worth, so charity and all other workes without perseverance will availe us nothing; because we must be faithfull unto death, if we would have the crowne of life; and therefore God doth give us this gift of Constancy, to continue so in our vocation that neither want, nor contempt, nor life, nor death, nor any other thing shall separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Iesus.

Revel. 2.10.

Rom. 8.39.

Fiftly, contempt of vanities.

Fiftly, the gift of Contemning worldly vanities, for seeing it is the property of the world to esteeme of us no better then of the scumme and off-scouring of the world; every one of us (except he be great in wealth and honours) is contemned of his owne kinred, of his owne people, in his owne house where he dwelleth, and of those very men whom he teacheth, and for whom, as a burning light, hee consumeth himselfe, that they should not be consumed with sinne; therefore the Lord giveth us this gift and spirit, contemnere contemni, to despise all contempts, and to regard none of the vaine and variable things of this wicked world.

Sixtly, Perfect power.

Sixtly, the gift of Perfect power, that to the penitent and dejected, to the humble and contrite hearts, they might open the gates of Heaven, and let them in in deſpight of all the divels of hell; and that againſt the obſtinate and rebellious ſinners, they might cloſe and ſhut the ſame, that notwithſtanding all their wealth and wit, their ſtrength and power, they may bee excluded out of the joyes of Heaven. Mat. 16. 19.

And ſo theſe are the gifts, Miniſters indued with theſe gifts which God giveth unto his Church, for the gathering together of his Saints; And indeed, howſoever the world vilipendeth them and (as the Prophet ſaith) doth make but a jeſting ſong of them, yet if we truly obſerve it, we ſhall eaſily finde it, that among all the gifts of God, which he now giveth unto men from heaven, the ſending of faithfull and able Miniſters indued with theſe gifts, to diſcharge their duties, is the chiefeſt gift, and doth obtaine the chiefeſt place; for alas, without them, what were we? unbaptized, ſtill wallowing in our ſinnes and filthineſſe; untaught, ſtill involved in ignorance; ununited to Chriſt, ſtill chained in the hands of Satan, without profeſſion, without Religion, without God. And therefore it was not without cauſe, that our Saviour exhorted us to pray unto God, that hee would ſend forth labourers into his vineyard; for otherwiſe he knew that in a very ſhort time it would grow wilde, and inſtead of grapes, to bring forth wilde grapes, inſtead of mercy and judgement, to bring forth cruelty and oppreſſion, and inſtead of piety and religion, to bring forth nothing elſe but idolatry and ſuperſtition. What a great gift it is to beſtow able Miniſters upon this Church Mat. 9. 38.

It is reported of Philip King of Macedon, that he ſent unto the Athenians to ſend him all their Orators of Athens, and he would ever live in league and peace with them; and the wiſe Senators being ready to deliver thoſe learned men into the hands of their mortall enemy, Demoſthenes ſaid unto them, that on a time the Wolves ſaid unto the Sheepe, that they conceived no ill thought againſt them, but onely for retaining thoſe dogs which were their deadly enemies, and oftentimes barked againſt themſelves, which were their feeders; and therefore if they would deliver up their dogges into their hands, they ſhould free themſelves from their barking, and they would become their patrones and defenders; whereupon the ſheepe being glad to bee rid of their dogges, and deeming themſelves happy to be at peace with the Wolves, they preſently delivered up all their dogges unto unto the mercies of their enemies, and they were incontinently conſumed; but within a very little while after, the Wolves began to picke quarrels againſt the ſilly ſheepe, and in a ſhort ſpace devoured the whole flocke; even ſo ſaith Demoſthenes, if you deliver up your Orators, for the favour of King Philip, you ſhall ſpeedily finde, that he will deale with you as the Wolves dealt with the ſimple ſheepe; whereupon they reſolved to keepe their Orators. What Philip of Macedon ſought of the Athenians.

Now Satan deales with our people, as King Philip did with the Athenians; he tels them that the Preachers be the onely dogges that he hates, the onely men that barke (and often bite) againſt them, which by their tithes and offerings they doe maintaine; and therefore he perſwadeth them to betray their Preachers into his hands, and to perſecute them with their furies; and if they doe ſo, he promiſeth all peace and content unto them; but when he hath once prevailed to deſtroy our bodies, he will ſoone deſtroy their ſoules and bring them into hell fire: and therefore it were well for them, if with the Athenians they would beware of their ſubtill and cruell enemy, and make much of them which with the hazard of their owne lives doe continually watch for their ſoules. The cruelty of Satan to deſtroy the Preachers, and his ſubtilty to deceive the people.

CHAP. II.

Of those speciall gifts which God giveth unto his children for the sanctifying of their soules, and principally of Faith, Hope, and Charity.

2 The gifts that Christ bestoweth to sanctifie our soules. Gregor. Hom 8. in Ezech.

SEcondly, those gifts which he giveth to sanctifie our soules are of divers sorts; for as Saint Gregory saith of Gods presence, gradus præsentiæ divinæ constituendi sunt, there are certaine degrees of the same; quia licet omnia tangit, non tamen æqualiter omnia tangit, so we must conceive of the giving of Gods graces, that although he giveth the same unto many men, yet he giveth them not after the same manner unto all men: and therefore we say that Gods gifts are either,

The graces that Christ giveth to sanctifie our soules are two-fold.

1. Common, 2. Speciall, } or that God giveth these gifts two manner of waies,

Either { 1. After a generall 2. After a speciall } manner; And

First, common.

First, the common graces and gifts of God, or those graces which he giveth out of his generall respect and love unto man, are given many times as well unto the wicked as unto the godly; and therefore in that respect, all those that professe Christ Iesus, and which have these generall gifts, are promiscuously called and taken for the Saints of God here in this life, and cannot indeed be discerned or distinguished by any man, from those that are the true elected Saints; for God only knowes who are his, and we may not so much as guesse who they are; for we are prohibited to judge of them, because we cannot possibly know them.

Secondly, speciall.

Secondly, the speciall graces and gifts of God, or those graces which hee giveth out of a speciall respect and love to some men more then others, (for I can finde no specificall difference betwixt the gifts that he giveth unto the elect, and those graces that he giveth unto many of the reprobates, but the same graces in a more perfect, and after a more speciall manner) are onely given unto the elect, whereby they are preserved and kept in the favour of God, untill their last breath.

We cannot tell who are indued with the speciall graces of Gods spirit.

But to nominate which are those common graces and gifts which Christ after a generall manner giveth unto all, or most of the professors of his name, and which are those speciall gifts which out of his speciall love he giveth onely unto his elect; or directly to set downe the specificall notes and differences, how to discerne and know the one from the other, and to distinguish in whom each of these sorts may be found (as some have venterously attempted to doe) seemeth unto me to bee none other thing then to shew who are elected, and who are not; for whosoever hath but the common gifts cannot be saved, and whosoever hath the speciall gifts of God shall not be damned.

Every one ought diligently to examine what graces he hath.

Yet I denie not, but by the diligent search into the nature and extent of these graces and gifts of God, and by the fruits and effects of the same, every particular man may know, whether he hath them yet or not; for the spirit of man (if man would search out his spirit) may know what is in man; and therefore, not that we should judge one of another, who hath these speciall gifts of God, and who hath them not, but that every man by searching his owne heart, may know if hee hath them, to his comfort; or if he hath them not, that he may earnestly labour, by prayer to God, to attaine them; I will a little speake of these speciall gifts and graces of salvation, and shew how farre they doe exceede those common graces of the onely outward professors.

Thom. 12a. q. 68.

The Schoolemen, all as it were with one consent, doe distribute the gifts of the Holy Ghost into these seaven speciall graces, which are mentioned in the Prophet Esay 11.2.

Esay 11.2.

1. Wisedome.

1. Wisedome. 2. Understanding. 3. Counsell. 4. Fortitude. 5. Knowledge. 6. Piety. 7. The feare of God. — I need not, (and my purpose is not) to stand long upon each of these, For These seven graces how prefigured.

Aquinas and his followers, have most excellently and largely inough handled each one of these excellent graces; yet something I must speake of them; they were prefigured in the Old Testament by the seven lights of one candlestick, and by the seven eyes of one stone; and in the New Testament they are expressed by the seven hornes of one Lambe. Zach. 4. 2. Zach 3. 9. Revel. 5. 6.

The first burning lampe of this candlesticke, or the first speciall grace of Gods spirit, is σοφία Wisedome; a grace indeed, and a gift to be desired above all the wealth of this world, if we would consider but the difference betwixt a wise man and a foole; Menander saith, σοφία δὲ πλούτου κτῆμα τιμιώτερον; Wisedome is a more pretious possession then all riches; and therefore nihil sapientia ardentius diligitur, nihil dulcius possidetur, nothing is loved, nothing is desired more then wisedome; for every man would faine be wise, and the very foole would be accounted so, and though one man affecteth honour, another desireth wealth, and a third loveth his pleasure, yet al men affect wisedome that affect nothing els; for wisedome is Cognitio primarum & altissimarum causarum, as Aristotle saith, Meta: l. 1. or as Cicero defines it, sapientia est divinarum & humanarum rerum scientia, Cicero Tusc. q. l. 4. and it is the greatest glory and eminency of any man, because a wise man in ragges is more to be respected, then the greatest Peere, that is arrayed in gold and pearles, if he be destitute of understanding. 1 Grace or gift of Gods Spirit. Richard in l. de contempt. c. 1.

And yet wisedome is a baite wherewith the divell catcheth many men, and thereby causeth them to fall into sinne, into hell; for the Prophet Esay speaking of Babylon saith, thy wisedome and thy knowledge have caused thee to rebell; and the Poet saith Esay 47. 10.

Ingenio perij qui miser ipse meo; mine own wit hath undone me; and therefore, non sine mysterio, it was not without a mystery, that God forbad Adam to eate of the tree of knowledge; because he knew the divell could wish all his servants wise, for as the Tragedian saith, Sancta parvis habitat in tectis venus, mediumq; sanos vulgus affectus tenet; pure love dwells in sillie soules; and the vulgar sort never durst, with Phœdra, to affect Hyppolitus; quia rudiores sunt quàm qui poterant decipi, for they have not wit inough to adventure upon strange villanies; and there be some vices that doe not commonly reside but in great wits, for none but Arrius, that was the subtlest Sophister of his time, durst invent such a blasphemy, as to denie the Deity of Christ, and none but Pellagius would have preferred mans nature before Gods grace; and therefore the divell knowing that, non nisi ex magnis ingenijs magni errores, great men doe the greater mischiefes, and the stronger heads worke the deepest plots, and doe invent the deadliest errors, he deales with us, as he did with Eve, labour by all meanes to have our eyes opened, and to fill our heads with all knowledge, that he may fit us to doe him the better service; [one Julian being abler to enlarge his kingdome more then twenty Diocletians. Wisedome what it is and the excellencie of it. Genit. Seneca in Hypolit. Some vices reside onely in subtle heads.

And therefore you must understand that there are divers kindes of wisedomes, but especially

1. Humane. 2. Divine. } And Wisedome twofold.

1. For the humane wisedome, you must take notice of it in a double respect,

1. As it is left unto us since Adams fall. 2. As it is further poysoned by the divels malice. } For

1 Humane wisedome considered two waies.

1. We doe allow that wisedome, whose genus is humanus intellectus, a humane understanding, and we like that best, which can goe furthest, with the light of true reason, which the divell hath ever laboured to obscure; for as the spider was accounted

1 As it is incorrupted.

The Spider why odious to Pallas, counted odious unto Pallas, the goddesse of wisdome, not for the subtiltie of her web, but for the poyson that was in her; so we dislike no man for the quickness of his apprehension or the subtiltie of his wit, but for the iniquity of the same; and therefore as the heathens fayned this goddesse to have a buckler all covered with Snakes and Serpents, to sting her adversaries, so may we, if it be like hers, of bright cristall, that is, pure and cleere, without any malice unto them, but onely to defend our selves; and as they say she was a subtle woman; so may we be as wise as Serpents; if we be as she was, ever a Virgin, and never defiled at any time; for we must confesse, that, as God gave Ieroboam a kingdome, so he allowed him to devize a way to retaine his people from revolting, but this way should not have beene by setting up his golden calves; so God gives every man leave to use his best pollicie for his safety and for his good; but that pollicie must be just and his wisedome must be innocent, or els it is not allowed by our Saviour Christ.

The buckler of Pallas,

Pallas what manner of woman she was.

Innocent pollicie allowed.

2. Though men are rather to bee pitied, because they have no more of this humane wisedome, (the divell having blinded us and obscured so much thereof,) then to be denied the use thereof; yet because Satan hath poysoned the same, that it doth but direct us a way, to runne away from God, and to faine our selves good when we are wicked, or, at the best, to be but with Agrippa, almost good; when a man is μὴ πονηρὸς ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀγαθὸς πονηρός, not all evill, but halfe evill, as Aristotle saith; therefore God hath made the wisedome of this world foolishnesse, and the Apostle might well say, ποῦ σοφὸς ποῦ γραμματεύς, where is the wise, where is the Scribe, where is the Learned, and yet, lest you should think God taketh pleasure in fooles, the Apostle doth not reject wisedome, nor bid us cast away our understanding; but he would have it guided by the wisedome of Christ, and subjected unto the obedience of God; and therefore a As it is poysoned.

Arist. polit. l. 5. c. 11.

a Divine wisdome

2. God sendeth his Spirit into the hearts of men, to make them wise unto salvation; and this is that divine wisedome, which is not inbred in any one, but is given from above to every one that hath it; and as the divell obscured all our originall wisedome which God had given us, and poysoned all that was left in us, that we should apply the same to evill ends; so the spirit of God doth guide that wisedome, which by nature we have in us, and illuminates us in that which nature understands not; for howsoever the subtle serpent may perswade us cretizare cum cretensi, to lay a snare for the Foxe, and to play the Wolfe with the Wolfe, & to think they are the wisest men, that have the subtlest heads to circumvent their neighbours; yet the Spirit of God will tell us, there is no such pollicie in the world as honesty, which hath oftentimes passed safely through the pikes of malice, and escaped free beyond all mens hope, when the subtlest heads of deceitfull wickednesse, have beene shamefully taken in their owne craftinesse; because, as the proverbe is, ἄλων δὲ φόρτος ἐνδὺν ἤλασεν, ἐνθ' ἔβη; salt will to the sea againe; or, as the Poet saith,

What the Spirit of God doth, to make us wise.

Honestly the best pollicie in the world,

Psal. 9. 16. Iob 5. 13.

Erasmus in chil. tit. ult. & Malesti. Ovid. in Metā

——Lex non justior ulla est
Quam necis artifices morte perire sua.
No juster law was ever sought
Then death for him that death had wrought;

And God hath promised to make the righteous, that are innocent without the least deceit, to become as Ieremy was, a defenced city, with iron pillars and with brasen walles, Ieremy 2. 18. and therefore though I doe confesse every good Christian, and every honest man is not alwaies wise, but they do often faile in many things through their owne simplicity, for want of wit, and not by the fault of honesty, yet this is beyond all certainty, there can be no better wisedome, no safer pollicie, no surer stratagem in the world, then to be an upright and an honest man, for this is your understanding and your wisedome, to preserve you against all stormes, to retaine a pure heart and a good conscience, Vide Deut. 4. & Iob 28.

All good Christians not alwaies wise.

But, because this is not sufficient to bring us unto heaven, to live here like honest

honest men on earth, therefore the spirit of wisedome doth illuminate our understanding to let us see and know the wisedome of God, that is, Iesus Christ, for he is made of God to us, wisedome, sanctification and redemption; and therefore, howsoever the wise men of the world may thinke the preaching of Christ and his Crosse to be foolishnesse; yet to us that beleeve, it is our wisedome, and our glory and our happinesse, and I care not how foolish I be thought in the world, so I be found wise in Christ; for I know what the wise man saith, that these worldly wise men in the last day, will confesse the truth both of themselues, and of every righteous man, saying, we fooles, thought his life madnesse, and the preaching of the crosse foolishnesse, but loe, he is counted among the sonnes of God, and we, like fooles are excluded with the wicked, and condemned for our folly.

1 Cor. 1. ult.

What the worldly wise say at the last day.

The second speciall grace and gift of Gods Spirit is συνεσις, understanding; and that is an habit, per quem animus ea perspicit quæ sunt. by which the minde of man doth perceive and see those things which are principia intelligibilia, intelligible principles, as Aristotle saith; and Plato hath one excellent observation of the understanding; quod infinitam virtutem in se habet, cum nec humana, nec divina respiciens satiatur, nisi infinitum Deum capiat, qui capacitatem ejus ab eo manantem impleat infinitam; that it hath a most large extent, and is never satisfied with the knowledge of any humane or divine things untill it layeth hold upon the most infinite God, which hath enlarged that capacity unto our soules, and is onely able to replenish the same himselfe; and therefore the more that any man understandeth the more he coveteth to understand, untill he understandeth God, without which we understand nothing, but are most truly compared unto the beasts that perish; the whole world being no more able to satisfie our understanding, then a pecke of corne is sufficient to fill up all the vast regions that are under the circumference of the highest heaven.

2 Grace or gift of Gods Spirit.

Cicero in Rhetor. l. 2

Aristot. Æthic. l. 6. & 10. l. 1.

Mag. Mor. cap. 34. Intellectus est habitus principiorum.

The understanding how unsatiable.

But I finde the understanding is taken two wayes in the holy Scriptures.

1. Quum res intelligibiles perspicuuntur.
2. Quum res istæ perficiuntur.

that is,

1. When we perceive things as they be,
2. When we doe those things that wee understand;

The understanding taken two wayes.

First, the things to be perceived are entities or beings that are invisible; because things seene come under the compasse of our sence, as the Philosopher speaketh; and the understanding is the eye of the soule, which seeth the things that are invisible, and these things are distinguished to be either,

1. Naturall.
2. Spirituall.

1 Way Intellectus est vis animi quæ invisibilia perspicit. Aug. de spiritu & anima.

Entities twofold.

First, for the understanding of naturall things, this eye of the Soule is very piercing sharpe; it is like the Eagels eye that can behold sub frutice leporem & sub fluctibus piscem, a Hare lurking under the shrub, and a Fish playing under the wave; we will presume to understand the times and seasons, and the secrets of all natures workes, heaven it selfe, and all the Host of heaven is within the reach of our understanding; it tells you how farre it is to every sphære, and it setteth forth the dimensions of every Starre to an inch. And yet blind man I dare be bold to say it, that Aristotle himselfe knew not all the knowable things in a straw; and as our Saviour saith, unto Nicodemus, if I have told you earthly things, and ye beleeve not, how shall ye beleeve, if I tell you of heavenly things? so I may say to these men, if our understanding be so dimmed and dulled, that we can but scarcely perceive naturall things, how shall we understand spirituall things? for

1 Naturall.

How sharpe our understanding is in naturall things.

Iohn 3. 12.

The least entitie not wholly knowne by any man.

Secondly, Spirituall things are supra intellectum humanum, above all humane understanding; because reason cannot pierce into them; and therefore it is most truly

2 Spirituall.

Ludovicus Calius Rhodig lec. antiq. l.3 c.1. de intellectu agente, et passibili.

truly said of Calius Rhodiginus, that, although the Soule of man needeth no other extrinsecall light, but onely that which is innate, if negligence or vice did not corrupt the same, to understand those things which are within it, as is the soule it selfe, powers, habits, faculties, and all the vertues thereof; yet, alia percipienda quæ sunt supra ipsum, to understand those things which are above it, and doe exceed all humane understanding; indiget omnino anima irradiatione ab ipsa luce veritatis prima; the soule doth altogether require to be inlightned with the bright beames of the first truth, which is God himselfe, or else man shall never bee able to attaine unto the least measure of the understanding thereof; and this irradiation of light from God upon our soules, or the inlightning of our understanding is called, infusio gratiæ ad divina contemplanda, the infusion of Gods grace, to inable us to contemplate and to understand spirituall and divine things: and the Scripture sheweth the same thing; for it tells us, that the word of God is our wisdome and our understanding; and without this we know nothing, Saint Paul himselfe for all his learning, and the sharpenesse of his wit, yet had he never knowne that lust and concupiscence had beene sinnes, if the Law of God had not said, Thou shalt not covet; but as many men thinke, and thereby deceive themselues, that thoughts are free, so he thought desires were free; but the Law of God condemneth both.

Deut 4.6.

The word of God bevond our understanding in two respects.

1 Of the letter.

And the Word of God is beyond our understanding in a two-fold respect.

1. In respect of the litterall tradition, } there of,
2. In respect of the mysticall exposition. } for

First, The letter of the Law and of the Gospell had beene altogether unknowne to us, if the Spirit of God had not delivered the same unto us, and therefore the Prophet David saith, In Iury is God knowne, his name is great in Israel, and the heathen have not the knowledge of his Lawes; their understanding and the best of their apprehensions was never able to conceive such equity and piety, as the very cortex or outward appearance of Gods Law doth expresse, as it will most easily appeare unto any man that hath but read those impure things, which Lycurgus, Solon, Plato, Aristotle and others of the best law-givers of the Gentiles, and of best understanding, have left unto the world, as an infallible testimony of a naturall mans blindnesse and ignorance in all spirituall things; and if they were so blinded in morall things; then may you cleerely see, how little they could see in the mysteries of the Gospell.

The impure things that the best understanding of naturall men have left.

2 Of the understanding of the letter.

Luke 24.

1 Cor. 2. 14.

Secondly, when God gave us his word, and writ the same unto us, that every one which could read, might read it and others heare it every Sabbath, every day; yet we find the very Apostles could not understand it, untill the Spirit of God had opened their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures; because the carnall man or naturall man can not perceive the things of the Spirit of God, nor can he know them; for they are foolishnesse unto him, and they are spiritually discerned; and therefore Saint Paul saith, no man can say that Iesus is the Lord but by the holy Ghost; no man can beleeve the incarnation, passion, resurrection, ascention, and the rest of the mysteries of Christian religion but by the speciall helpe and illumination of the Spirit of God; Nay more the Prophet David sheweth, that we cannot understand the Law of God, which seemes to be plaine enough without any secret meaning or hidden mysteries, unlesse we be guided and enlightned by this Spirit; and therefore not onely Origen saith, that intelligentia quam ignorant pastores, est sensus spiritualis legis veteris, ignotus scribis & principibus sacerdotum: but also the the Prophet David, though he was a man of great understanding, as the composing of his Psalmes doth sufficiently prove him to be, yet doth he earnestly pray to God to open his eyes that he might behold the wondrous things of his Law; and againe, hee saith, give me understanding and I shall keepe thy Law; and againe, give me understanding that I may learne thy Commandements; and againe, give me understanding that I may know thy testimonies; and againe, the righteousnesse of thy testimonies

Origen super epist. ad Rom 11.

Psal. 119.18.

Verse 34.
Verse 73.
Verse 125.

testimonies is everlasting, give me understanding, that is, of thy testimonies, and I shall live; and againe, give me understanding according to thy Word; and so his many prayers for understanding doth most apparantly shew, that of himselfe he did not understand them; and the reason is plainely rendred by the Apostle, that the Law is spirituall and every man carnall sold under sinne; and therefore if ever we will understand the will of God, and the mysteries of our faith, we must with the Prophet David, pray to God, that he would open our hearts as he did the heart of Lydia, and as S. Paul prayeth for Timothie, that he would give us understanding in all things; or as the same Apostle prayeth for the Ephesians, that the God of our Lord Iesus Christ, the Father of glory might give unto them the spirit of wisedome and revelation in the knowledge of Christ, that the eyes of their understanding being enlightned, they might know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints; but the blindnesse of our humane understanding, the naturall corruption of our carnall mindes, and the over-weening conceits of our proud hearts, that will not begge understanding at the hands of God, is the cause, that many men doe reade much and heare often the word of Christ, and yet understand little.

Verse 144. Verse 169. Rom. 7.14. 2 Tim. 2.7. Eph 3 1. 17. 18. The pride of our hearts causeth us not to understand.

And if we understand it not, then all our reading, all our hearing, all our praying, and all that we doe is worth nothing; for as S. Paul tells us plainely, he had rather speake five words with his understanding, then five thousand in an unknowne tongue; and therefore he saith, I will pray with my spirit, and I will pray with my understanding, I will sing with my spirit, and I will sing with my understanding also; otherwise as God rejected all the blinde Sacrifices that were offered unto him, so all the blind service that we doe to God without understanding, shall be no waies acceptable unto God.

1 Cor. 14.19. Verse 15.

And therefore, as the Morall Poets said the frame of this world, though exceeding good, yet would it soone decay, if the linke and chaine of it were not tyed to the foote of Iupiters chaire; so all our understanding, though it be the eye of our soule, yet it is full of darkenesse, and would soone bring us into the pit of destruction, if the same be not Dei verbo directus & spiritu divino illuminatus, that is, directed by Gods word, and illuminated by this spirit of God, which is the spirit of understanding.

The frame of the world how sustained.

Secondly, as the understanding is strictly taken pro vi animæ intellectuali, when we perceive things as they are, so in the largest sense it is more cómonly taken pro virtute actuali, for the effecting of those things, which we doe understand; for S. Basil saith ille intelligens est, qui secundum mentem & rationem vivit, he is an understanding man, not which knowes things, but which liveth according to the dictate of his reason and understanding; and S. Chrysostome saith, as he that beholdeth iniquity, quantum ad Deum videns, cæcus esse dicitur is said to be blind though his eyes be open, like Balams traunce, and as he that liveth in sinne is said to be dead while he liveth, because he liveth not to God, but to the devill; ita qui habet intellectum, & bonum non operatur, quantum ad Deum habet nullum; so as he that hath understanding and doth not good according to what he understandeth, we may say, that in respect of God, he hath no understanding at all; and the Christian Poet saith,

2 Way the understanding how taken. Basil sup. prov. 1. The iust man is of best understanding. Num. 24.16. Dion. Chrysost super Matth. c. 13. hom. 31.

Scriptorum domini plene videt omne profundum, implet qui factis cognita verba pijs;
Nam nimis a sensu doctrinæ devius errat si quæ curavit scire fugit facere.

Anthol. Sacr. Jacob. Bill.

And so the holy Scriptures testifie the same thing; for Moses saith, Behold I have taught you statutes and judgements even as the Lord my God commanded me, keepe therefore and doe them, for this is your wisedome and your understandings in the sight of the Nations, that is, to doe these things which you are commanded; and that which we read, Blessed is he that considereth the poore and needie, the vulgar Latine reads it, beatus vir qui intelligit super egenum & pauperem, blessed Deut. 4. 6.

is

Arnob sup. Psa. 40.

is he that understandeth over the poore; that is, saith Arnobius, qui curam habet de iis qui ad Christum pertinent, & in pauperibus Christo benefacit; which hath a care of them that are poore and in misery, and so I conclude this point, that this doing of Gods will is the best understanding in the world.

3 Grace or gift of Gods spirit. Sylva allegor. in verbo consilium. pag. 274.

The third speciall grace or gift of Gods spirit is βέλευμα. counsell, & consilium est sententia, qua decernimus aliquid faciendum aut non faciendum; and counsell is that last determination of reason and judgement, whereby we discerne and perceive what ought to be done, and what ought to be left undone, and the word counsell is taken divers wayes in the Scriptures; as Consilium est appetitus faciendi excogitata ratione. Cicero rhet. l. 2.

First, for the will and pleasure of any one, as God made man from the beginning and left him in the hand of his counsell, Eccles. 15. 14.

Secondly, for consent, as in novissimis diebus intelligetis consilium ejus; which we translate, in the latter dayes, ye shall consider it perfect, that is, approve his doings to be most just, Ierem. 23. 20.

Thirdly, for deliberation or discussion of a thing, as, placuit consilium Pharaoni, the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, Gen. 41. 37.

Counsell how taken. Psal. 14 10.

Fourthly, for repentance, as, ye have made a mocke at the counsell of the poore, that is, their purpose to repent and to turne unto the Lord.

Fiftly, for prudence and understanding, as, qui agunt omnia cum consilio, reguntur sapientia, with the well advised is wisedome, Prov. 13. 10.

2 Sam 19. 11.

Sixtly, for a decree, as, consilium totius Israel venit ad regem, the speech of all Israel is come to the King, and so it is taken divers other waies as the learned have observed.

Counsell two-fold.

But you must understand, that all counsell take it in what acceptation you please, is either

1 Humane counsell

1 The humane counsell is either, { 1. Humane. 2. Divine. } and { 1. Taken. 2. Given. } for Hesiodus his opinion of wise men.

First, the Greeke Poet saith, ἥτος μὲν πανάριστος, ὃς αὐτὸς πάντα νοήσει, φρασσάμενος τὰ κ', ὀπίσσω καὶ ἐς τέλος ἧσιν ἀμείνω.

He truly is the best man, which doth know all things of himselfe, understanding those things that follow, and what things will prove best in the end; ἐσθλὸς δ' αὖ κἀκεῖνος, ὃς εὖ εἰπόντι πίθηται.

And he is also good, which can obey and follow that good counsell which is given him.

ὃς δ' μήτ' αὐτὸς νοέῃ, μήτ' ἄλλου ἀκούων ἐν θυμῷ βάλληται, ὅδ' αὖτ' ἀνήνωρ αὐήρ.

The greatest foole is he that refuseth counsell.

But he that neither understandeth things himselfe, nor doth purpose in his mind to hearken to the counsell and advice of others, then surely that man is very unprofitable both for himselfe and others, and the Scripture termeth him the greater foole that refuseth to take counsell, then he that is destitute of understanding to give counsell; for though a man be ignorant of things, yet there is great hope of him, if he will listen unto the advice and follow after the counsell of those that know him; but he that knoweth nothing and will learne nothing, there is more hope of a foole then of him? but Curtius tells us, that in suo quisque negotio hebetior est, quam in alieno, every man is duller in his owne businesse then in the affaires of another man; because our counsels are troubled, and our understandings darkened, either through affections or passions, when we consider things for our selues; every man will be partiall in his owne case: and therefore there is no man so wise, but he will have need of counsell; and as Menander saith, βελῆς γὰρ ὀρθῆς οὐδὲν ἀσφαλέστερον. there is nothing safer for a man then right counsell, there is nothing better then the same; tamdiu florent respublicæ, quamdiu regnat consilium; for so long shall every common-wealth flourish, so long shall every man prosper as either of them is guided with good counsell: and therefore let us consider,

Curtius l. 7.

Turbida consilia eorum, qui sibi suadent nouum flagitium est te aliis consilium dare, foris sapere, sibi non posse te non auxiliatorier. Terent. in Heauton.

Connsell how excellent.

1. Some

{1. Some things of Counsells. 2. Some things of the Counsellors.} And

Two things observable.

1. Touching counsells, I meane not here the generall counsels of the Church, but such particular counsells as private friends or els states doe both give and take, for their owne speciall good; and of these I pray you marke,

1 Touching counsells. Three points handled.

{1. The necessity 2. The excellency 3. The diversity} of them.

1. Counsell is a thing so necessarie in any thing that wee undertake, as that S. Gregory saith, fortitudo destruitur, nisi per consilium fulciatur, the greatest strength is soone destroyed if counsell doth not preserve it; because the more wee thinke our selves able to doe, the lesse we shall be sure to effect, when blinde courage shall runne headlong, without the eyes of counsell: so Horace saith, vis consilij expers moleruit sua; force void of counsell falls with his owne waight; Antonius Monachus saith, that a man which doth all things without counsell, is like a cittie, which withstands her enemies without walls, and therefore we may justly say that counsell is most needfull in every act, and so the son of Syrach saith, my sonne doe nothing without counsell. Eccles. 32.

1 The necessity of good counsell. Greg. in Moral.

Horat. car. c 3. od 4. Anton. Mon. in melissa pars 1 ser. 11. ex Salem.

2. This necessity of it sheweth the excellency of it; for when Pyndarus saith aqua rerum optima, water is the best of things, he meanes it, because no creature, in no place, at no time, can live long without water; so nothing can be well done without counsell; and therefore Menander saith, ἱερὸν ἀληθῶς ἐστιν ἡ συμβουλία, truly counsell is a most sacred and divine thing; and he would have said so, and more too, if he had truly knowne that all good counsell doth proceed from this holy spirit of counsell; but he knew it not; and therefore

2 The excellency of good counsell.

3. We must distinguish of counsells that they are all either {1. Evill. 2. Good.}

3 The diversity of counsells.

1. Evill counsells are according to their authors and instruments many and manifold; I will onely note you three sorts of them.

1 Bad.

1. Rash, 2. Craftie, and 3. Wicked.

Three sorts of evill counsells.

1. Seneca saith, deliberandum est diu quod statuendum est semel, those counsells are ever best, which are best deliberated and discussed and not suddenly executed; quia deliberare utilia mora est tutissima, because delay, though it be grievous, yet is it ever safest for our profit; and experience hath ever found that rash heads have caused many sorrowfull hearts, when their prudent counsell, as they thought, hath produced nothing els but shame and penitence; and therefore I say with Aristotle, deliberandum est tarde, deliberata verò celeriter peragenda, men ought to take time to consider, and when they have determined, things ought to bee speedily dispatched.

1 Rash counsels.

Vir ea rationis fuit optimus, si in deliberando cunctatus, & pertimuit quicquid potest contingere, in agendo autem considat, Thucyd. l. 6. Æthic l. 6. c. 9.

2. The subtle and craftie counsells, prima specie læta, tractu dura, eventu tristia sunt, at first sight may seeme smooth, but in time they will prove foule, and at last they will become sad, to those that follow them, saith Cornelius Tacitus.

2 Craftie counsels

3. Wicked counsells are those that are invented either against God or good men; such was the counsell of Simeon, of whom Iacob saith, ô my soule, come not thou into their counsell; and this signifieth, the plots and practices of the Scribes and Pharisees against our Saviour Christ, as both Origen and Saint Ambrose doe observe, and the Prophet David had propheſied thereof saying, that The Kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers tooke counsell together against the Lord and against his annointed; But you know what the Scripture saith, there is no counsell against the Lord; and the craftiest counsells doe not alwaies prevaile against good men, but they doe sometimes, nay very often turne to the shame and destruction of their authors, as you may see in Haman, Achitophel and others; of whom Clandian doth most excellently say

3 Wicked counsels. Gen. 48. 6.

Origen sup. Gen. Ho 17.

Psal. 2. 2.

Sic opifex tauri tormentorum ę reperter,
Qui funesta novo fabricaverat ęra dolori,
Primus in experium Siculo cogente tyranno,
Sanxit opus, docuitq́ suum mugire inventum Claudian. in Eutrop. l. 1.

Quam benè dispositum terris, ut dignus inīquī
Fructus consilij primis auctoribus instet,

ô how well, and how justly hath God disposed things here on earth, that the worthy fruit of wicked counsells should first fall upon the heads of their owne inventors.

Sic multos fluvio vates arente per annos
Hospite, qui cæso monuit placare tonantem,
Inventas primum Busiridis imbuit aras,
Et cecidit sævi quo dixerat, hostia sacri.

And therefore Gamaliel, the wisest Lawyer that I reade of, gave this advice unto the Iewes, that they should take heede how they did consult either against God or against his servants, least, in seeking to doe mischiefe unto others, they brought a plague upon themselves.

2 Good counsell.

2. The good counsell is a desire of doing those things that are just and honest in the sight of God and men; Plutarch in the life of Aristides tells us, that Themistocles in a certaine meeting of the Athenians told them, that hee had found out a way that might very much advance the glory and dignity of the Athenians, but it was not fit to be published to all the people; the Senate therfore determined it should be revealed onely to Aristides, and if he would approve it, they would all receive it; so Themistocles told Aristides, that he thought of burning all the navall stations, that is, all the shipping and the haven dockes of the Grecians; and so the Athenians should have the rule, mastery and dominion of all Greece; and Aristides went unto the people and told them, Themistoclis consilio nihil esse utilius, sed eodem nihil inhonestius, that there could not be a more profitable counsell for the Athenians then that of Themistocles, but withall, there could not be a more dishoneſt; wherupon the people charged Themistocles, that he should never speake of it any more; a most excellent example of a vertuous people that would utterly refuse all profit that was not honest; and therefore if Heathens would hearken to no counsell that tended to any turpitude, ô how should this shame us that are Christians, if wee give eare to any counsells that are unjust.

A memorable story.

The goodnesse & the honestly of heathens.

2 Touching counsellors.
Who is the best counsellor.
Stobæus.
Panorm. de rebus gestis Alph. lib. 3.

2. Having heard somewhat of the counsells of men, we are now to speake of the Counsellors, that we may know who and what manner of men are the best Counsellors; and I reade that Bias being demanded, quis optimus Consiliarius, who was the best Counsellor, answered, time; for truth is the daughter of time; but Anphonsus, King of Arragon, being asked the same question, answered, bookes; because they would tell him freely without feare, without flattery, what was truth and what ought to be done; Saint Gregory saith, nullus fidelior tibi ad consilium potest esse, quam qui non tua sed qui te diligit, no man can bee a better and a faithfuller Counsellor unto thee then he that loves thee more then thy goods; and Saint Ambrose tells us, he is the best Counsellor, that hath understanding to know what is best, and hath honesty to do nothing but what is good.

Foure properties of a good counsellor.

Out of all which you may collect, if you put all this together, that a good Counsellor must be

1. Auntient.
2. Learned.
3. A friend.
4. Honest.

} For

1 Auntient.
Young men not the best counsellors.
Greg. in mora l. 30.

1. If dayes teach knowledge, and time breeds experience, then certainely youth is fitter to learne then to teach, and young men ought rather to take then to give counsells unto others; and yet you must note, that the Scriptures calls not those men old, which have seene many yeares, sed qui morum gravitate maturi sunt, but such as doe excell in gravity and good life, as Saint Gregory doth observe; because, as the wise man saith, The honourable age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor that which is measured by the number of yeares, but wisedome is the gray hayres unto men, and an unspotted life is the old age; where notwithstanding,

Sap. 4. 8, 9.

ding, you muſt underſtand, that although the moſt honourable age is the moſt undefiled age, and wiſedome is gray haires, that is, deſerves to have the honour and reſpect that is due to gray haires, yet doth this no waies denie, but wiſedome and underſtanding, is gained rather and oftener by experience and length of time, then by the quickeſt conceptions of young heads; as you may ſee in many places of the booke of Iob; and therefore when Sertorius had rowted the army of young Pompey, and did heare that Metellus was come with more aide, he broke up the warre, and calling his Captaines together he ſaid, I would have ſent this young man home well whipped, if this old woman (ſo he called Metellus) had not come to aſſiſt him; becauſe commonly, young men doe not onely want experience, but are alſo more raſh then the aged, which do many times know more then the others thinke; and therefore Saint Paul would not have a Biſhop to be a novice, leſt, being lifted up with pride, he ſhould fall into the condemnation of the divell.

Wiſedome got by age.

Maxime reſpublica per adoleſcentulos labefactata, a ſenibus ſuſtentata ac reſtituta ſum. Cicero Cato Maior.

1 Tim. 3. 6.

2. Learning and the reading of bookes, is an excellent helpe to make a man wiſe for counſell; becauſe one yeares reading may informe him of more accidents then he could poſſibly ſee in all his life; and by my bookes I ſee what was done and ſaid in all places, in all ages from the beginning of the world to this preſent time; and therefore no Counſellor can be ſo well qualified as hee that takes the counſell of his bookes; and yet, becauſe our memory is not ſo faithfull as our eyes, we doe ſooner forget what we reade then that which wee have learned by experience; therefore Bias and Alphonſus, that is, time and bookes are beſt together, to make the beſt Counſellour.

2 Counſellors learned.

3. Hoſtium nota conſilia, etiam prudentiſſima ſiunt inutilia, ſaith Titus Livius, the beſt counſells of enemies, are often unprofitable, alwaies to be ſuſpected; and it is not without cauſe, that the Wiſe man ſaith, The reproofe or wound of a friend, is better then the kiſſes of an enemy; yea the Prophet David ſaith, Let the righteous ſmite me friendly, but let not their pretious balmes breake my head; a ſtrange thing that a balme ſhould breake the head; yet ſo it is when their words ſeeme ſmoother then oyle, and yet are very ſwords, as the ſame Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh; and therefore we muſt ſhew our love, if we would give counſell to any one; or els, be we never ſo wiſe, never ſo learned, men will reject our counſells, when they doe ſuſpect our perſons; which ſhould teach all preachers to love their people if they deſire to ſave their ſoules.

3 Counſellors muſt be friends that love us.

Pro. 27. 6.

Pſal. 141 5. c.

Pſal 55. 22.

4. In every one that would give counſell, plurimum valet vitæ probitas, the uprightneſſe of his life is very available; for who would looke for a cleere fountaine in a mire and a dunghill? who would drinke out of troubled waters? ſo, quis utilem judicet cauſæ alienæ, quem videt inutilem vitæ ſuæ? anne eum idoneum putabo, qui mihi det conſilium, quod non dedit ſibi? Who will thinke him profitable for another mans cauſe whom he ſeeth unprofitable for his owne life? or ſhall I thinke that man fit to give me counſell which gives none unto himſelfe? And therefore whoſoever will counſell another, let him firſt reforme himſelfe.

4 Counſellors ſhould be honeſt.

Ambroſ. de offic. lib. 1.

2. The divine counſell, is ſometimes taken for the law of Moſes, and ſometimes for the truth of the Goſpell, as both Saint Baſil and Saint Hilarie doe collect upon thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, The counſell of the Lord ſhall endure for ever, Pſal. 33. 11. and this counſell bringeth health and ſalvation to all them that follow it, Pro. 3.

2 Divine counſell.

Baſil in Pſal. 32. & Hilar. in Pſal. 62.

The author of this, and ſo of all other good counſell is God and none but God; quia meum eſt conſilium & æquitas, and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, omne conſilium eſt ab eo, a quo omnia proficiſcuntur; all counſell is from him, from whom all things doe proceede; and his counſell is either

God the prime author of all good counſell.

Aug. de doctr. Chriſt. l. 1.

1. Secret.
2. Revealed.

1. The ſecret counſell of the Lord is inſcrutable, irreſiſtible and irreprehenſible; for who hath knowne the minde of the Lord, or who hath ever reſiſted his will? and Gods counſell.

1 Secret.
Eſay 40.
Rom 11.

he is righteous in all his waies and holy in all his workes.

2 Revealed. Psal.103.7.

2. For his revealed counsell, the Prophet David saith, He shewed his waies unto Moses and his workes unto the children of Israel; but our chiefest Counsellor is Christ himselfe, and therefore he is called our Counsellor; and under him all those, to whom he bestoweth this spirit of counsell; and they are the Apostles and the Preachers of the Gospell, as Saint Gregory saith, or in a lower kinde, any other man qui Christi membris dat consilium, which giveth good counsell unto the members of Christ; as Hieronimus Lauretus saith.

Esay 9.

Greg 4. Mar. 51 & 11. Mar 18. & 14. 23 Lauret. in Sylva alleg p. 274

Hence therefore you may understand, how you may be made partakers of the counsell of God, of that counsell, which will never faile you, either in life or death; that is specially foure manner of waies,

The meanes to make us partakers of Gods counsells.

1. By reading his will.
2. By hearing his Word.
3. By praying for his assistance.
4. By consulting with him through his counsellors.

These are the onely meanes to make us wise, either for this life or the life to come. For 1 Reading of Gods Word.

1. If the reading of other bookes be a speciall helpe for good counsell, then certainely the reading of Gods booke must needs be of an incomparable worth for this end, this booke being like Moses rod, that when it was turned into a Serpent, did swallow up all the serpents of the Magicians; and therefore Moses saith, we should alwaies reade the booke of the law, and the Lord telleth Iosua, it should never depart out of his hand, but as the Prophet David saith, he should meditate therein day and night, if he would be numbred among the blessed; and if they must doe so to the Law, what should we doe to the Gospell?

Exod. 7. 12.

Word of God how excellent.

2 Hearing of sermons.

2. Because every Schoole-boy can tell you that legere & non intelligere, negligere est, therefore we must heare this Word not onely read but also Preached and expounded unto us; because this Word of God is like a deepe sea, wherein every meane capacity cannot wade.

3 Praying for understanding.

3. Because no man can understand the writings of Saint Paul without the spirit of Saint Paul, nor the Word of God without the Spirit of God; therefore, confugere debemus ad orationem, we ought to betake our selves unto our prayers; that God would guide us with his counsell, untill he doth receive us into his glory.

4 By consulting with the preachers.

4. Because we must not thinke our prayers will now procure us immediate revelations, but a blessing, upon our reading and hearing and the like ordinary meanes, which God hath appointed, as the prayers of Cornelius was the meanes that procured Saint Peter to be sent unto him; therefore we must consult with God by the mediation of the Preachers of his Word and interpreters of his will; because God hath set them apart for this end, & hath promised his Spirit unto them to leade them into all truth, and hath commanded the rest to seeke the knowledge of his lawes at their mouth; and therefore not onely David a good man did alwaies consult with the Prophets and Priests of God, but also Saul that was defective in many things, would goe to enquire his way of the man of God; and so all the children of Israel great or smale, that desired to prosper, did alwaies consult with the Ephod, and came for counsell unto the Priest or Prophet; nay the Gentiles, that knew not the true God, yet because they knew all counsell came from God, did ever send unto the Oracles for counsell what they should doe, in all matters of any moment.

1 Sam. 9. 6, 8.

Many mens affaires why not blessed. Esay 19. 3.

And I doe verily beleeve this is the reason why God doth not blesse the affaires of men, because they aske counsell but not of God, they will consult rather with flesh and blood, and follow after the counsell of Egypt, whereof the Prophet speaketh, that is, Machinamenta mundi, the subtle plots and devices of astute heads, rather then the honest and religious counsells of Gods servants; for the Lord professeth that he will destroy the counsell of Egypt, and he will catch the crafty, as he did Achitophel, in their owne snares.

Ob. But

Ob. But you will say Priests and Clergy men are so cloystered and bookish, that they are strangers to the civill affaires of the Common-wealth, or if they know any thing, they are so conscientious and so nice, that they dare not tread upon the grasse for feare of being bitten by a Serpent, they dare venture upon nothing, for feare of wounding a weake conscience, whereas matters of state and points of pollicie, must not altogether be examined at the touch-stone of piety; because these rigidi Zenones, that will allow of nothing but of vertue, and that vertue so naked without any commixtion of fraud, they are like Cato, qui optimè sensit, sed tamen nocuit interdum reipublicæ; which alwaies thought best, and yet did often hurt the common-wealth; Quia loquutus est tanquam in politeia Platonis, non tanquam in face Romuli, because he would have things so, as if we lived in Plato's polity, that is, a world of honesty, and not as we do live among the filthy dregs of Romulus progeny; and it is most certaine, that the same wit will not serve us among subtill Cretans and perfidious Carthaginians, as would be very sufficient among all honest and plaine-hearted Nathanaels.

Priests too nice and conscientious to be politique Councellers.

Cicero ad Attic. Ep. l. 2. Ep. 1.

Sol. To this I answer, that I know no reason why Clarks and Clergy-men, being of as good naturall understanding and quicknesse of apprehension as others, and of more abilities, by their industry in reading many bookes, and observing many occurrents, than many others, should be in any thing more blind than any others, especially if they should apply themselves to those imployments that the others do; and for the rigidnesse of their behaviour, and the strictnesse of their conscience, in all actions and imployments, I say it is the onely meanes to breake the necks of all Machiavillian plots and infernall machinations; for I am sure God loved the people of the Iewes, and would have them not onely to subsist, but also to be glorious, and more famous than any other nation of the world; and yet he gives them no more leave to use any craft or subtilty, that might not well stand with a good conscience, than if they were in Plato's polity, nor so much neither; and yet (I hope) they will confesse that God knew which was the best policy to preserve his people; and he knoweth how to give the best counsell, and that is the same, which is most honest, and may best stand with a good conscience; and who knowes what belongs to cases of conscience better than they that are to guide our consciences by the counsels of God? And therefore I say, happy is that kingdome, which is a kingdome of Priests, and where the Priests have the counselling of the kingdome, that it may be, as S. Peter calleth it, a royall Priesthood, when the King and all the Kingdome will rather follow the directions of the Priests, than of the People; not that kings should only take the advice of Clergy-men, as if I meant any waies to disparage their grave, wise, & most honourable Councell; God forbid, the least thought thereof should once possesse my head; but that with them and among them, and in all places of all kingdomes, the Prophets and Preachers of Gods Word should be thought fit Counsellers to guide and to direct our consciences in any imployment.

Abilities of Priests answerable to the best.

Honesty able to overcome all plots.

God gave no liberty to the Israelites to dissemble.

Priests know best how to guide our consciences.

There be foure other speciall gifts and graces of Gods Spirit which I should here handle, that is, fortitude, knowledge, piety, and the feare of God, but that I have gone over each of them in other places already; and I have beene so long upon these, that I must hasten towards an end; and therefore I meane to contract all those that are the most speciall gifts and graces of Gods Spirit, into a lesser summe, to set you downe a fewer number, and (as S. Paul saith) to shew you a more excellent way; for though it be most true, that S. Hierome and S. Bernard say, that as vices go by troupes, so the graces of God do so assemble themselves and cohere together, that he which hath one, hath all, and he that wants one, wants all, that is, he that hath one in any measure of perfection, hath the seeds of all the rest, (as Bellarmine saith) whereby, as occasion serveth, he can put them, being but stirred up by grace, into execution: They are not onely like those divine sisters, like one another, but they are also linked and chained together, like the indissoluble links of a golden chaine; yet I say that the chiefest graces which I find, and the surest gifts to bring us unto life, are those three whereof the Apo-

Hieron. in Epist. Ber. de pass. Dom. 42. Bellar. de grat. & lib arb l. 5. c. 3. Forma est non omnibus una, Nec diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum.

1 Cor. 13. ult. The three chiefeſt graces.

ſtle ſpeaketh, faith, hope, & charity, for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, he that doth theſe things ſhall never fall, ſo I may be bold to ſay, he that hath theſe gifts ſhall never faile.

1 Of faith; and that is fourefold.

First, faith is diſtinguiſhed by the ſchooles to be fourefold.

1 Hiſtoricall. 2 Of miracles. 3 Temporary. 4 Iuſtifying.

1 Hiſtoricall.

The firſt is common to the divels aſwell as to men; for the word πιστεύω hath diverſe ſignifications, as οἶδα ὦ πέπιστευκα, I know whom I have truſted; λαῷ μὴ πίστευε, relie not upon the people; but commonly in Scriptures it ſignifieth to aſſent, as, καρδίᾳ πιστεύεται εἰς δικαιοσύνην, with the heart we believe unto righteouſneſſe; Ἀβραὰμ ἐπίστευσε τῷ Θεῷ, Abraham believed God; κἀγὼ πιστεύω, and I partly believe it, ſaith the Apoſtle: and in this reſpect the Apoſtle ſaith, the divels believe; for we believe what we know; & dæmones Deum & pagani credunt, and the very divels do know God, ſaith S. Auguſtine, and they know Chriſt, Acts 19. 14. Mat. 8. 29. and they know the Scriptures; for they alleadged the ſame to Chriſt; and they know the Goſpell, and have called it ὁδὸν σωτηρίας, the way of ſalvation; and therefore they muſt needs believe, Quia fides eſt cognitio eademq; certiſſima, in quantum intellectus determinatur ad aliquid cognoſcibile, becauſe faith is the ſureſt knowledge of things, and we cannot chooſe but believe what we do certainly know: And S. Auguſtine comparing the confeſſion of S. Peter, Thou art the Chriſt the Sonne of the living God, and the confeſſion of the divell, I know who thou art, even that holy one of God, ſaith, that although S. Peter was commended, and the divell rebuked, yet in utriſq; non falſa ſed vera, non deteſtanda ſed approbanda eſt; the confeſſion was true in both; and therefore the faith of the divels in reſpect of the object muſt needs be a right and a true faith.

Iames 2. 19.

Aug. de cognit. vera vit. c. 37.

Mat. 16. Mar. c. 1. Aug. de unico bap. c. 10.

Idem tract. 10. in Ep. Ioh.

A doctrine to confound wicked livers, who, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Pejores & tardiores ſunt quam dæmones, are farre worſe than the divels, for he believes and trembles, but the wicked even as Nero when Seneca diſſwaded him from his villanies, and perſwaded him ſo to carie himſelfe, ut facta ſuperi ſemper comprobent ſua; as that the gods might alwaies approve his actions, anſwered like a dogged Atheiſt, ſtulte verebar eſſe, cum faciam, deos? Thou foole, doſt thou thinke, that I feare or believe, when I do theſe things, that there are any gods? So do they ſcarce believe there is any God; for if they did, I wonder that with the divels they do not tremble.

2 Of miracles. 3 Temporary. Mat. 7. 22. Titus 1. 1. 1 Iohn 5. 4. Iohn 3. 15.

The ſecond and third kind of faith, that is, the faith of miracles, and the temporary faith, which believeth for a time, and then falleth away, they are likewiſe common unto the wicked, aſwell as unto the godly; for they do not onely believe the Law and the Goſpell with an hiſtoricall faith, but they may alſo do many miracles, as our Saviour teſtifieth.

4 The juſtifying faith.

The fourth is only proper unto the true Saints of God, and it is called fides electorum, the faith of Gods elect: a faith that overcommeth the world: and a faith which cannot periſh. If any man would know whether he hath this faith or not; he muſt look into theſe two things.

Two properties of it. 1 His works. 2 Perſeverance.

1 Property. Greg. l. 1. hom. 22. in c. 40. Ezek.

For firſt this is called, fides operans, a faith that worketh, and that worketh by charity; and therefore S. Gregory ſaith, Quantum credimus, tantum amamus, & tantum quiſq; operatur, quantum credit, that a true believer loves as he believeth, and worketh as he loveth; and S. Auguſtine excellently ſaith, that credere in Deum eſt credendo amare, & amando in eum ire; to believe in God is by believing to love him, and by loving him to be united and made one with God; ſo that, to have this true faith in God, is to love God, and to do the will and commandements of God.

2 Property.

And ſecondly, this faith is a continuing and perſevering faith, ſuch as will continue unto the end: Theſe are the two maine properties of the true ſaving faith.

2 Of hope. Luther. in Gal. de 5. 5.

Secondly, Hope is a patient expectation of the thing that we believe, and it is not only inſeparably joyned unto faith, each one having reſpect to other, as the two two Cherubims looking on the mercy-seat, but it hath such great affinity with faith, as that the one can hardly be discerned from the other.

Exod 25.20.

Yet I find they differ in three respects, { 1 Of Order. 2 Of Object. 3 Of Office. } For,

How hope differeth from faith.

First, though as the fire and the light in respect of time do appeare together, so all graces are infused together; yet as the fire is before the light, because the light is caused by the fire, so faith, saith Alexander de Hales, in respect of causality, because all graces flow from it, is the mother-grace, and the root of all the rest; and therefore faith is the ground of hope, and doth alwaies precede the same; in which respect S. Augustine saith, Sicut in radice arboris nulla apparent pulchritudinis species, &c. As in the root of a tree there appeareth no shew of beauty, and yet what beauty or goodnesse soever is in the whole tree, the same proceedeth from the root; even so (saith he) what vertue or goodnesse soever sheweth it selfe in any man, it doth all spring from the root of faith.

1 Respect of order.

Alexan. de Hal. p. I. l. 12. M. 3. art. 2.

Secondly, Objectum fidei adaequatum est omne verbum Dei in genere, the object of faith is the Word of God, the object of hope is res verbi, the promise of God, and the goodnesse of God; faith believes there is a heaven and a hell, hope onely looks for good things, and faith is of things past, things present, and things to come, but hope is only of things to come.

2 Respect of object.

Alsted. syst. theolog. l. 3. loc. 17.

Thirdly, the office of faith is to tell us what we must believe, but the office of hope is to tell us how we must patiently abide, and looke for what we do believe.

3 Respect of office.

And we find hope to be either { 1 Humane. 2 Divine. } And Hope twofold.

The first is many times fallible, Nam multa praeter spem scio multis bona evenisse, & etiam qui speraverint, spem decepisse multos; for as many things do happen to many one beyond their hope, so their hopes do deceive many a one, and as the Poet saith, Plaut. Rud.

1 Humane hope.

Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.

They do deceive themselves by their own hope: and yet this is an exceeding great helpe unto men in all their actions; Spes servat afflictos, and this is the chiefest stay unto afflicted minds: Nam fortuna innocentem deserit saepe, spes nunquam, for when fortune forsaketh many times an innocent man, yet his hope will never leave him: but as the Poet saith,

The profit of a good hope.

Iam mala finissem Letho, sed credula vitam
Spes fovet, & melius cras fore semper ait;

Hope still doth promise better fortunes unto him: and therefore this is a most excellent vertue; though like other humane vertues it is defective in many points; as first, in respect of the things that they hope for, wealth, honours, and such like; So Alexander having given away almost all that he had in Greece, and being demanded what he left for himselfe, said hope; that is, of more honours and kingdomes: and secondly, in respect of the cause from whence they do expect these things, from themselves, or such like, but not from God; whereas indeed, that man is accursed which putteth his hope in man, Quia de Creatore desperare, est spem in creatura ponere, because that to hope in man is to forsake our God.

Ier. 17.5.

But,

The second, that is, the divine hope which is wrought in us by the Spirit of God, is infallible: for whosoever hopeth in him, shall never be confounded; The wicked (saith Salomon) shall be cast away for his malice, but the righteous hath hope in his death; and what can be more than this? for many things do discourage us in death; for the dying man seeth his body is weake, his friends weeping, his Physitians despairing, and his conscience shewing him the catalogue of his sins: O wretched man that he is! Who shall comfort him? Yet he whose hope is in the Lord his God, doth even then see the heavens open, and the Angels ready to receive him; and though he knoweth his body is to be laid in the grave, yet doth

2 Divine hope.

Psal. 22. 4, 5, 6. Prov. 14. 32.

doth his flesh rest in hope: and therefore what can be sweeter than hope? O dearely beloved, remember what the Psalmist saith, Blessed is the man whose hope is in the Lord his God.

Every hope maketh not happy.

But here you must know, that all kinds of hope in God make not all men happy; for there is a bold and a presumptuous hope, a hope of wicked hypocrites that live in sin, and yet do hope for heaven.

And therefore we must distinguish that there is a twofold hope in God.

1 Κατὰ δόξαν, an opinionative hope.
2 Κατὰ ἀλήθειαν, a true infallible hope.

Iob 8. Prov. 10. Wisd. 5.

The first is the hope of wicked men, and this shall melt away like a winter-snow, for the hope of the wicked shall perish; they may look for much, but they shall have nothing.

True hope springeth from the true feare of God.

The second is the hope of the righteous, and this shall never perish, because it grounded upon a good foundation; that is, the promise of God to them that feare him; for so the Psalmist saith, Qui timetis Dominum, sperate in illum, you that feare the Lord, hope in him:, And therefore if you would be sure to have the true hope in God, then feare the Lord; because the testimony of a good conscience must be the ground of hope; for so S. Paul sheweth, even by his owne example, saying, I have fought a good fight; and I have kept the faith, there is the ground, and therefore is laid up for me the crowne of righteousnesse, and there is the Anchor of his hope cast upon that sure foundation; and he that thus hopeth in God is truly happy.

Thirdly, of charity

Thirdly, charity is rectissima animi affectio, the rightest affection of the mind, whereby we love God for his own sake, and our neighbours for Gods sake; and as S. Augustine doth observe, it is proper only unto the Saints of God, because, as S. Chrysostome saith, charity is optimum amoris genus, the best kind of love; and therefore S. Augustine saith, that habere omnia sacramenta & malus esse potest, habere autem charitatem & malus esse non potest, a man may be partaker of all Sacraments, and be wicked, but to have charity and to be wicked, is impossible: and S. Paul saith enough in the praise of this most excellent grace: to write Iliads after Homer, were to commend it after him, and therefore Ile say no more but what S. Augustine saith, Charitas est qua vincit omnia, & sine qua non valent omnia, charity is that which overcommeth all things, and without which all things will availe us nothing; because as the Christian Poet saith,

Aug. de doct. Christ.

Chrys. hom. de char.

Christicolas veros exprimit unus amor.

It is love and charity alone that proves us to be true Christians.

Well then, wouldst thou know thy state, whether thou beest in the state of grace or not? Thou needest not to ascend to heaven and search into the secret counsell of God, to see whether thy name be written in the booke of life, but descend into thine owne heart, and see whether thou hast perfect charity, both towards God and man: for if thou lovest God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thy selfe, I dare assure thee that in all the Book of God, I could never find yet a surer note, or a more infallible signe of our eternall salvation than the same; For hereby we know (saith the Apostle) that we are passed from death to life, because we love the brethren; and hereby shall all men know that you are my Disciples, (saith our Saviour) if you love one another: but if thou lovest not God, or if thou lovest not all men, say what thou wilt, do what you will, lift up thine eyes, hold up thy hands, and pray in every corner, yet I know no signe thou hast of saving grace.

The surest signe that we shall be saved.

1 Iohn 3.

But here you must observe, that all kind of love towards God and men, will not serve our turne; for there is a generall kind of love to God, which all wicked men in respect of their being, and that manifold good which they receive from him, do beare towards God; and there is a speciall love to God, in a most vehement, and a most excellent manner; and there is an inordinate love of men, either too much or too little, or not after the right manner; and there is a true, discreet, and a fruitfull love to be shewed towards them: and this is properly called

Love of God twofold.

charity;

charity; and therefore if we would be ſure of Gods favour, we muſt uſe no mediocrity in loving God, we muſt uſe no meaſure; Quia modus diligendi Deum eſt ſine modo, becauſe he is to be loved beyond meaſure, with all our hearts, with all our ſoules, and with all our ſtrength, ſo as if we were raviſhed with the love of God, even as the Church ſaith in the Canticles, Stay me with flagons, and comfort me with apples, for I am ſicke of love. Cant. 2.5.

And ſo much for theſe three divine graces which Chriſt giveth us to ſanctifie our ſoules.

Now after the Holy Ghoſt beſtoweth upon the Saints faith to believe in him, hope to expect all happineſſe from him, and charity moſt fervently to love him, and all men for his ſake, then he worketh many other graces in the hearts of his elect, to preſerve them blameleſſe in the ſight of God, and to defend them from the malice of that roaring Lion; as a filiall feare, never to offend him, and a ſpeciall care alwaies to pleaſe him; and beſide and above all the reſt, he infuſeth into their ſoules theſe two excellent gifts; Two other gifts of Chriſt his Spirit.

viz. 1 Providence to fore-ſee 2 Patience to indure } all things.

First, Moſes in his laſt ſpeech, and beſt ſong that he made unto the children of Iſrael, ſaith, O that they were wiſe, that they underſtood this, that they would conſider their latter end; that is, that they would remember things paſt, underſtand things preſent, and conſider things to come; for this is the onely difference betwixt man and beaſt, the one craves for the preſent time, the other fore-ſeeth and provideth for the times to come: and the want or neglect of this conſiderative fore-ſight is the cauſe of many miſeries; for as he that fore-ſeeth evill, either preventeth it, or preparеth himſelfe for it, and ſo it is more eaſily borne of him, becauſe it doth not ſuddenly apprehend him; ſo he that never ſeeth it till it ſtrikes him, is the more amazed with it, becauſe he feeleth that which he never feared: and therefore as Iob ſaith, that he was ſurpriſed with that which he feared; ſo the Saints of God have this grace given them by God, to expect and fore-ſee miſeries before they come, that they may be the more tolerable unto them if they come. 1 Providence. Deut. 32.

And as they have one eye open to feare and fore-ſee evill before it commeth, ſo they have the other eye open to fore-ſee and to hope for good, that when it comes, it may be the more welcome to them; and that uſing all lawfull meanes to compaſſe it, they may the ſooner attaine unto it.

Ob. But here it may be ſome will object and ſay, as it was ſaid of old,

Εἰ μ' ἰὼν μαθεῖν, ἃ δεῖ πάθειν, καλὸν ἰὼν τὸ μάθειν,
Εἰ δ' ἰὼν πάθειν, ἃ δ' ἰὼν μαθεῖν; τί δεῖ μαθεῖν; χρὴ δὲ παθεῖν.

Scire ſi liceret quæ debes ſubire, & non ſubire; pulchrum ſit ſcire:
Sed ſi ſubire oportet, quæ licet ſcire, quorſum ſcire? Nam debes ſubire:

That is, as D. Everard doth as wittily tranſlate thē, as they were prettily compoſed. D. Everard in his Arretham p. 96.

If a man might know the ill that he muſt undergo,
and ſhun it ſo, then were it good to know:
But if he undergo it, though he know it, what boots him know it? He muſt undergo it.

And ſo of good things, if he might the ſooner obtaine them by fore-ſeeing them, it were worth our paines to looke after them; but ſeeing no care, no providence can either helpe us unto the good we deſire, or prevent the evill we feare: becauſe as one of our Poets ſaith,

What ſhall be, ſhall be; ſure there is no choice;
Things needs muſt drive as providence decrees:
Wherefore in all our haps let us rejoyce,
Becauſe the eye eterne all things fore-ſees,
Which to no ill at any time agrees.

And

And therefore to what end should we trouble our selves in vaine, to fore-see that which we cannot forbid?

Sol. To this I answer briefly, that although God worketh all things according to his will; yet it is his will ordinarily to worke by ordinary meanes and secondary causes, as we may see in the second of Osee 21. I will heare the Heavens, and they shall heare the Earth, and the Earth shall heare the Corne, and the Wine and the Oyle, and they shall heare Israel; And therefore whom God hath decreed shall escape evill, or attaine unto any good, he hath also decreed that they should by their care and diligence, the one to prevent it, and the other to use all lawfull meanes to procure it; and they that will not use all possible care to obtaine these ends, doe most apparantly shew an infallible argument against themselves, they shall never attaine unto their desired end; because it is a sure rule, that whatsoever end God hath decreed, he hath also decreed the meanes to bring to passe that end. And therefore as he hath decreed the salvation of his Saints, so he hath decreed to give them his grace to fore-see all things that are necessary for them to know; that they may the better use all diligence to eschew the evill, and to obtaine the good.

Osee 2.21. God decreeth the meanes as well as the end of any thing.

2 Patience. Heb.10.36.

Secondly, seeing our estate in this life is a state full of miseries; and that we are long expecting good, before we can injoy it; therefore we have neede of patience, that after we have done the will of God, we might receive the promise; and therfore God seeing how needfull patience is for his servants, he giveth this gift unto us, (and it is indeed a most excellent gift, without which I know not how the Saints could well subsist,) that we might patiently and contentedly suffer whatsoever happeneth unto us, and as Iob saith, quietly to waite all our dayes, untill our change shall come.

It is recorded in the bookes of the Gentiles that in the Olympian combates, that Champion wan the Garland, that bestowed most blowes upon his Antigonist; but in the warres of the Lord, where God himselfe is our rewarder, wee finde that he beares away the Crowne which beareth patiently the most blowes from his adversaries, and in lieu thereof returneth nothing, but good words.

Patience is taken two waies.

But here we must understand patience is used either,

1. Καταχρηστικῶς, abusively and improperly.
2. Ἰδίως, rightly and properly, and

1 Abusively and that foure waies. 1 Way.

In the first sence, we finde the word used foure manner of waies.

First, for a sinnefull carelesnesse when men, per patientiam asininam, will suffer themselves, like lazie asses, to be drawne and compelled by lewd company, to drinking, swaggering, or any other sin whatsoever.

2 Way.

Secondly, for a stoicall apathie, when men will locke up all naturall passions, and strive to be insensible of any thing that shall befall them.

3 Way.

Thirdly, for a customarie indoring of all stormes; when like children in the Schoole, which doe so much the lesse care for whipping, the oftner they are whipped, wee grow insensible of all crosses, by a continuall custome of bearing crosses.

4 Way.

Fourthly, for a naturall fortitude, when, through the strength of nature and the courage of a heroick minde, men will undergoe whatsoever adversities shall betide them, and will seeme to beare the same, as if their strength were the strength of stones, and their flesh of brasse, as Iob speaketh.

Iob 6.12.

2 Properly. 1 Way. Rom.2.4.

In the second sence we doe likewise finde the word used many waies; as

First, for a containing of our selves from the revenging of any injuries done unto us.

2 Way. Rom.2.7. Heb.10.36. Psal.9.18.

Secondly, for a contented waiting, and a most quiet expecting of what wee desire, without muttering.

3 Way.

Thirdly, for a sensible and a well-pleasing suffering of all afflictions, wants, povertie, losses, persecutions, malice, contempt, contumelies, poverty, death it selfe; and that not for any gaine of worldly good, for so worldlings suffer much, losse of sleepe,

ſleepe, labour, and toyle, to get a little wealth; the drunkard many a fall, and ſome hurts for the love of his pleaſant wine; and the envious man many a blow, and ſome wounds perhaps, to wreake his malice upon his adverſarie; and yet in theſe men which doe thus ſuffer much, that they may doe evill, nec miranda, nec laudanda eſt patientia, quæ nulla eſt; admiranda duritia, neganda patientia, their patience is neither to be admired, nor to be commended; becauſe it is a ſuffering for ill ends; but our ſuffering muſt be, for to ſhew unto the world, that rather then we will in the leaſt degree diſhonour God, or make ſhipwracke of our faith and good conſcience, we are moſt willing to indure whatſoever ſhall bee impoſed upon us.

Augin. lde patient. c. 5.

All theſe kindes of divine patience, the holy Spirit of God worketh in the hearts of the godly; to make them patiently to waite for good, and quietly to ſuffer all evill; and all this without grumbling, or charging God fooliſhly.

Iob 1. 22.

CHAP. III.

Of the formes wherein the Holy Ghoſt appeared: and why; and how the Apoſtles are ſaid to be filled with the Holy Ghoſt.

FOr the third, that is, how God beſtoweth theſe gifts unto men, we muſt underſtand that as his gifts be divers, ſo he doth diverſly beſtow them; For 3 How God beſtoweth his gifts.

First, thoſe gifts which are given for the edifying of his Church he gave them, after two ſpeciall manner of waies,

1 The gifts of edifying the Church how given.

1. Abundantly and viſibly in the infancie of his Church.
2. Sufficiently and inviſibly ever ſince, and to the end.

} For

1 Abundantly and viſibly.

First, the Scripture tells us, that when the day of Pentecoſt was come, they were with one accord in one place, and ſuddenly there came a ſound from Heaven, as of a mighty ruſhing winde, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting, and there appeared unto them, cloven tongues like as of fire, and it ſate upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeake with other tongues as the ſpirit gave them utterance: Out of all which, we may chiefely obſerve theſe three ſpeciall points,

Acts 2. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Videlicet
1. Who were filled.
2. With what they were filled.
3. The effects of their filling.

} For

First, Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, that all the company both of men and women, were filled with theſe graces; Saint Cyprian ſaith, the whole multitude of the beleevers, that were gathered together, were repleniſhed with his ſpirit; Saint Auguſtine, Saint Gregory, and Lorinus ſay, that all the Apoſtles and Diſciples were filled with the Holy Ghoſt; but Saint Hierome and Theodoret Beza, and others doe affirme, that none but the Apoſtles onely were repleniſhed with theſe gifts: howſoever, the matter is not great, it deſerves not contention, though it may afford diſcuſſion; for mine owne part, I thinke all that were there, were not repleniſhed; becauſe it is ſaid, many of the beholders wondered, and others derided at this there ſudden alteration; which certainely they would never have don (becauſe there had beene none to doe it) if they had beene all filled, and I cannot eaſily yeeld that the Diſciples were filled with theſe gifts; becauſe the promiſe of ſending downe the Holy Ghoſt, was onely made unto the Apoſtles (as we may eaſily collect out of the fift verſe of the first Chapter,) and becauſe Saint Peter with the other Eleven, doe onely ſtand up to anſwer for themſelves, (as we may plainely ſee in the fourth verſe of the ſecond Chapter,) and eſpecially becauſe ſome antient copies have beene found, which doe expreſſely ſay, that all the Apoſtles were filled with the Holy Ghoſt. And 1 Who were filled at the day of Pentecoſt.

Cyprian ſer. de Spiritu Sancto.

Hieron in epitaph. Paulæ.

This

1 Cor 13 32. God can bleſſe or preſerve his ſervants in the midſt of the wicked. Iudges 16.38.

This ſheweth how the ſpirit of the Prophets are ſubject to the Prophets; and that as God can powre downe his plagues upon multitudes of men, and yet preſerve one free in the midſt of millions of men, and he can bedewe that one with his grace, like Gideons fleece while all the reſt are drie, and deſtitute of the ſame; which doth exceedingly commend the wiſe diſpenſation of Almighty God, and affoord a great comfort unto the Saints of Chriſt; that although they live in the midſt of a moſt crooked and pervers generation; yet they may ſee how God can preſerve them as the lilie in the midſt of the thornes, and indue them with his grace, when all the reſt of the world flowes with ſin.

2 With what they were filled.

Secondly, they are ſaid to be filled with the Holy Ghoſt, where we muſt obſerve theſe two things,

Two points.

1. The thing, wherewith they are ſaid to be filled.
2. The filling of them with that thing.

And

1 Point.

First, they are ſaid to be filled with the Holy Ghoſt; and we finde that the name of the Holy Ghoſt is taken two waies,

The name of Holy Ghoſt taken two waies.

1. For the eſſence of the Holy Ghoſt.
2. For the effects and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt.

1 Way. For the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt. That the Holy Ghoſt is a true God by nature.

First, it is taken for the eſſence of the Holy Ghoſt, as, by the ſpirit of the Lord were the heavens made; and in this ſence all creatures are filled with the Holy Ghoſt; becauſe they live and move in him; for the ſpirit of the Lord filleth the world, and containeth all things, ſaith the Wiſe man.

And yet ſome have beene ſo bold, as moſt impiouſly to affirme that the Holy Ghoſt was but a created quality, or a godly motion in the hearts and mindes of righteous men.

But the very worke of the Holy Ghoſt, as, creating all things, as Iob ſheweth, the ſpirit of the Lord hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given mee life; and as the Prophet David more expreſſely affirmeth, ſaying, that by the ſpirit of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt thereof by the breath of his mouth; and here, aſſuming on him viſible formes, and ſitting upon each one of the Apoſtles onely, and none els; (which no created quality could poſſibly doe;) and eſpecially the comparing of Eſayas words, with the words of Saint Paul, will ſufficiently confute this damnable error, and moſt manifeſtly ſhew unto us, this holy ſpirit to be the true and eternall God: for whom Eſayas calleth the Lord of Hoſts, which ſaid unto him, Goe tell this people; heare yee indeede, but underſtand not, and ſee yee indeed but perceive not, Saint Paul calleth the Holy Ghoſt, ſaying, well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt, by Eſayas the Prophet; ſaying, Goe unto this people and ſay, hearing ye ſhall heare, and ſhall not underſtand; and ſeeing yee ſhall ſee, and not perceive; and therefore our Saviour biddeth us to goe, and teach all nations, baptizing them, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

Iob 33.

Pſal 33.

Eſay 6.9.

Acts 28.25,26.

Beſides, the Scripture ſaith, that the Spirit of the Lord filleth heaven and earth; whereupon Saint Baſil, Saint Auguſtine, Saint Ambroſe and others have proved againſt all hereticks, that the Holy Ghoſt is true God and by nature God; becauſe that to be every where, cannot by grace belong to any, but onely to him, that is by nature God, which reſerveth this to himſelfe, to be every where; and therefore Saint Auguſtine writing againſt Maximinus, an Arrian Biſhop, ſaith, I cannot expreſſe how much I marvell what a heart you have, ſo to extoll the Holy Ghoſt, as to make him every where preſent, to ſanctifie the faithfull, and yet that you dare denie him to be a God, for is not he a God which filleth heaven and earth.

Sap. 1.7. Ambr. ſ. de S S. l 1. c. 7.

Aug. cont. Maxim. l. 3. c. 21.

But it is objected (as Nazianzen ſaith) that he is no where called God, but the Holy Ghoſt, or the Spirit of God; and therefore he is not God.

Nazian. orat. 5. de Theol.

I anſwer briefly, that this is falſe; for Saint Peter ſaid unto Ananias; why hath Satan filled thy heart, to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? thou haſt not lied unto men, but

Acts 5.3,4.

unto unto God; And therefore, ſeeing the ſpirit of God created all things; and being created, preſerved them, as Moſes ſheweth; the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, that is, to cheriſh and to retaine them together; and now in like manner, he ſanctifieth and preſerveth us, as Melanchthon ſheweth, in that godly wiſh which he maketh, Gen. 1.2.

Spiritus ut Domini naſcentia corpora fovit, cum manus artificis conderat ipſa Dei;
Sic foveat cœtus, qui Chriſti oracula diſcunt, accendatque igni pectora noſtra ſuo.

And eſpecially ſeeing that the holy Scripture doth more plainely teſtifie the ſame almoſt in every place; we ſay that the name of the Holy Ghoſt is firſt taken for the Eſſence of God.

Secondly, The name of the Holy Ghoſt is taken for the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt; as where the Prophet ſaith, Take not thy holy ſpirit from me: and where the Apoſtle ſaith, Know you not that Ieſus Chriſt is in you, except you be reprobates? And againe, you are not in the fleſh, but in the ſpirit, if the ſpirit of God dwell in you; and ſo when it is ſaid, that they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, wee muſt underſtand it of the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt. 2 Way for the graces of Gods Spirit. Pſal. 51.12. 2 Cor. 13.5. Rom. 8.9.

And theſe gifts and graces of Gods Spirit, are excellently well deciphered and ſet downe unto us, under the properties and conditions of thoſe formes and figures, wherein the Holy Ghoſt did appeare unto us, and that is (if I doe rightly collect them,) three ſpeciall times;

Firſt, unto the Iſraelites, { 1. In a pillar of cloud by day. 2. In a pillar of fire by night. } The Spirit of God appeared in the likeneſſe of five ſpeciall things.

Secondly, at the Baptiſme of Chriſt, he deſcended upon him like a Dove.

Thirdly, At the day of Pentecoſt, he appeared { 1. Like the ruſhing of a mighty winde. 2. Like cloven tongues of fire. }

Firſt, Hee appeared in a pillar of cloude, to ſhew unto us, that as the cloude betokeneth, Firſt, like a cloud.

{ 1. A ſhadowing from heate; 2. A ſending downe of raine; } As both Philoſophie and experience ſheweth.

And the Scripture teſtifieth the ſame, as the Heavens were blacke with cloudes and windes, and there was a great raine; ſo the Spirit of God doth overſhadow us from the heate of the wrath of God, it cooleth and refreſheth our ſcorched ſoules, and, as the raine maketh the barren earth fertile and fruitfull, ſo doth the graces of Gods ſpirit make our barren hearts plentifull in all good workes; for the Holy Ghoſt in many places is compared unto water, becauſe that 1 King. 18.45.

as water { 1. Mollifieth the hard earth, 2. Fructifieth the barren ground, 3. Quencheth the greateſt heate, 4. Cleanſeth the fouleſt things, } and ſo forth. The properties of water.

So doth the Spirit of God { 1. Soften our hard hearts. 2. Fructifie our barren ſoules. 3. Quench the heate of luſt. 4. Cleanſe us from all our ſins. } And ſo make us to become fit temples for himſelfe to remaine in us. In what reſpect the Holy Ghoſt is like unto water

Secondly, He appeared in a pillar of fire, to ſhew his conſubſtantiality with the Father and the Sonne, ſaith Nazianzen; becauſe God is fire, and ſo appeared in the fiery buſh; from whence it may be, came that cuſtome among the Chaldeans, which afterward ſpread it ſelfe among many other Nations of the Gentiles, to Secondly, like fire.

worship the fire for their God; whereas indeed they should have worshipped that God which is fire and did appeare like fire, to teach us, that as the fire hath in it (saith Oecumenius) these three speciall things,

That is, { 1. Calorem. 2. Splendorem. 3. Motionem. } { 1. Heate, to warme, mollifie, and purifie. 2. Splendor, to give light, and to illuminate. 3. Motion, to be alwaies working. }

The properties of the fire.

In what respects the Holy Ghost is like unto fire.

1 Resp.

Even so the Spirit of God; First, Warmeth and heateth the hearts of the godly, with a fervent and a fiery zeale of all godlinesse; hee mollifieth their hard and stony hearts, and it consumeth all the drossie substance of sin, and so purifieth their soules from all wickednesse.

2 Resp, Iohn 6.13.

Secondly, He illuminateth their hearts with the knowledge of God, for hee bringeth them into all truth, and hee maketh their light to shine before men, that they seeing their good workes, doe glorifie their Father which is in Heaven.

Mat 5.15.

3 Resp.

Thirdly, He maketh them alwaies to be in action, and never idle, but as it is said of Christ, ever going about doing good.

Thirdly, He appeared like a Dove, when he descended upon our Saviour Christ at his Baptisme; first, because (as Bonaventure saith) he came not then to strike our sinnes, by the zeale of his fury, but to beare them, and to take them away, through the meekenesse of his Passion; but on the other side, he descended upon the Apostles like fire, because in these which were simply men, and therefore sinners, he would kindle a spirituall fervency against themselves, and cause them to punish those sinnes in themselves, by repentance, which God had pardoned unto them, through his mercy; and secondly, he descended on Christ, like a harmelesse Dove, and not like unto tongues of fire; because Christ was not to be taught, which is signified by the tongues; for his lippes were full of grace; nor to be sorrowfull for his sins, which is signified by the fire; because in him there was no sin; but his Dove-like properties were to be shewed; that he was innocent, meeke, and lowly in heart; for as of all the beasts of the field, the little silly Lambe is in most respects best qualified, and therefore is Christ called the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world; so of all the fowles of Heaven, the Dove in most respects is most excellent: for she is annunciator pacis, the messenger and proclaimer of peace; she brought the Olive branch unto Noah; she wanteth gall; she hath no bitternesse in her; she never hurts with her bill nor clawes; she is full of love, and yet she never sings any wanton tune, but woo, woo, is her matutinus & vespertinus cantus; her mournefull morning and evening song: and therefore the Holy Ghost descended on Christ like a Dove, to shew these Dove-like qualities of this Lambe of God; and to teach that wee must bee thus qualified like Doves, if we would have this heavenly Dove, this Holy Spirit of God to remaine within us, for on them that are otherwise, this Dove hath not yet descended.

Thirdly, like a Dove.

Greg hom 30. in Evang.

Cyrillus hieros. Catech. 7.

Iohn 1.29.

In what respect the Holy Ghost is like a Dove.

Mat. 3.16.

Fourthly, He appeared like the rushing of a mighty winde; for a true winde it was not, (saith Oecumenius,) but the Spirit of God, Qui à spirando & flando dicitur; which from blowing or breathing is called Spirit, is said to appeare.

Fourthly, like a mighty winde.

1 In what respect the Holy Ghost is like unto winde.

First, Like the winde; and that, for these five reasons.

1 Resp.

First, As the winde bloweth where it listeth; so the graces and gifts of Gods Spirit are given to whomsoever it pleaseth him; for he will have mercy on whom hee will have mercy.

Iohn 3. 8. Exod. 33.19.

Secondly, As the winde scattereth the dust, and driveth away the chaffe from the corne; so the graces of Gods Spirit doth winnow the consciences of the Saints, and drive away all wicked thoughts and cogitations from their hearts.

2 Resp.

Thirdly, As the winde carrieth away the ship against the maine streame; so will the grace of Gods Spirit carry a man against the current of his naturall inclination; for if Socrates by the sole helpe of morall instructions was able to bridle his his loose disposition, how much more shall those men be restrained from all lewdnesse, which are led by divine inspiration?

3 Resp.

Fourthly, As the winde cooleth and recreateth all those that are scorched with the heate of the Sunne; so doth the grace of Gods Spirit, recreate all those distressed people that are scorched with the heate of afflictions, or burned with the concupiscence of their sins. 4 Resp.

Fiftly, As the winde will passe unresistably; so will the grace of Gods Spirit worke it owne effect; and all the power of darkenesse is not able to resist it; and therefore 5 Resp.

Secondly, It is said, that he appeared like the rushing of a mighty winde, because that as the mighty winde in the first booke of Kings, the 10. and the 11. did rend the mountaines, and breake the rockes before the Lord; so the grace of Gods Spirit, and the Word of God is mighty in operation, able to shake the stoutest and the proudest man, and to breake in peeces the stoniest heart: Indeed our people doe esteeme our words none otherwise then winde, which make us spend so much winde to little purpose, to weary our selves, and scarce to waken them; but here let them know that the Spirit of God (like Æolus) which shutteth up the windes in his bagges, can when he pleases, let out the same in a mighty manner, to amaze the consciences of the stoutest Peeres; and either to drive away their sins, as it drove away the Grashoppers and Locusts that over-spread the land of Egypt, or else to drive them away like the Chaffe, from off the face of the earth. 2 Why the Holy Ghost is compared to a mighty winde. 1 King 10.11. Exod.10.19. Psal.1.5.

Fiftly, He appeared like cloven tongues of fire. Fiftly, like cloven tongues of fire.

First, Like tongues; for though the tongue, that is, such a tongue as is set on fire from Hell, (as Saint Iames saith) is many times the instrument of the divell, to doe much mischiefe, to blaspheme God, and to abuse men; yet, Vt non debent oves odere pelles suas, quia induunt eas lupi; As the sheepe should not hate their skins, because the Wolues doe many times put them on; so ought none that is wise, reject that which is good, because it is often abused by the bad; therefore seeing (as Pittacus saith) the tongue as it is the worst member in a wicked man, so it is one of the best members in a godly man, as the Prophet David sheweth, when hee saith, I will praise God with the best member that I have, the Holy Ghost did appeare like tongues. 1 Why the Holy Ghost appeared like tongues. Iames 3.6.

First, Because (as a Father saith) Symbolum est lingua Spiritus Sancti, à Patris verbo procedentis; The tongue is a Symbole of the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Word of the Father; for as the tongue hath the greatest cognation, and the neerest affinity with the Word, and is moved by the Word of the heart, to expresse the same by the sound of the voice (saith Saint Gregory,) so the Holy Ghost hath the neerest affinity that may be with the Word God, and is the expressor of his voice, and the speaker of his will, that receiveth of him, and revealeth all unto us. 1 Reason. Iohn 16.14.

Secondly, Because, as the tongues are the sole instruments of knowledge, which convaye the same from man to man; for though the soule bee the fountaine from whence all wisedome springeth, yet the tongue is the channell and the conduit pipe, wherby this wisdome, this knowledge is communicated and transferred from man to man; so the Holy Ghost is the sole Author and Teacher of all truth; Christ is the wisedome of God, but the Holy Ghost is the Teacher of this wisdome unto men and it pleased him by this onely way to convay this wisedome of God unto men; for seeing the world by their wisedome knew not God in the wisedome of God, it pleased God through the foolishnesse of Preaching, to save those that beleeve. 2 Reason. 1 Cor.1.21.

Secondly, Hee appeared like cloven tongues, because all tongues and all languages are alike knowne and understood of GOD, and because this Spirit can teach all men all languages, and the gift of tongues is a gift of God. 2 Why he appeared like cloven tongues.

Thirdly, he appeared like cloven tongues of fire, they were ignita non polita, fiery tongues, and not fine polished tongues; because the Spirit of God 3 Why he appeared like cloven tongues of fire.

delighteth rather in the zealous and the fervent tongues of Saint Paul and Apollos that warme the heart, then in thoſe eloquent tongues of Cicero and Demoſthenes that delight the eares; for this is the deſire of Gods Spirit to kindle the hearts of men, and to ſet them on fire, with the love of God, and our brethren: So when our Saviour preached unto the two Diſciples that travelled towards Emaus, they ſaid, Did not our hearts burne within us, while he talked with us by the way? This is the effect of the tongue of the Holy Ghoſt, to worke zeale and fervency in the hearers. And ſo you ſee the thing wherewith they were ſaid to be filled, that is, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt.

Luke 24.

CHAP. IV.

Of the filling of the Apoſtles with thoſe gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and the ſignes of their fullneſſe.

2 Point. The filling of them with theſe gifts.

SEcondly, they are ſaid to be filled with theſe gifts; and Dydimus ſaith, that we cannot be filled with any creature; Quia Deus ſolus implet creaturas; Becauſe nothing but God can repleniſh and ſatisfie his creatures. Vnus pellæo Iuveni non ſufficit orbis; The whole world is not able to content us: ſo large is the capacity of mans deſire: And yet we finde, that in ſome ſenſe, every man may bee truely ſaid to bee full; for nature it ſelfe abhorres vacuity; and therefore the wicked are ſaid to bee full of all unrighteouſneſſe, full of ſinnes, full of worldly cares: and being full of theſe things, they muſt be voide of grace, and empty of goodneſſe; their braines empty, that they underſtand nothing, their memory empty, that they remember nothing, and their hearts empty, that they practiſe nothing that is good.

Rom. 1. 29.

All men are either full of ſin or of grace.

But as the veſſell that is full of water muſt be emptyed of that water, before it can be filled with Wine; or as thy hand full of Counters (ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome) muſt be emptied of the Counters before thou canſt fill the ſame with gold; ſo muſt we empty our ſelves of ſin before we can be filled with grace; and we muſt caſt away the cares of this world before we can be ſatisfied with the joyes of Heaven; and therefore the Apoſtles did forſake the world and left all things to follow Chriſt, and then having emptyed themſelves of all worldly vanities, to follow Chriſt; they were preſently filled with theſe heavenly graces of Chriſt.

Hugo de Prato apud Diſcip.

Now (as Hugo de Prato ſaith) there be foure ſpeciall ſignes of fullneſſe.

Foure ſpeciall ſignes of fulneſſe.

That is { 1. Not to murmur. 2. Firmely to ſtand. } { 3. To receive no more. 4. To flow over. }

And we finde this to be true in each ſort of them that are full, For 3 In the wicked.

Firſt, The wicked, which are full of all unrighteouſneſſe.

1 Signe.

Firſt, They are dumbe, and open not their mouthes to give thankes to God for any thing; and if God knocketh on theſe veſſels with the fingers of his bleſſings; yet we ſhall not heare the leaſt ſound of any thankefullneſſe; they are full of ſins, and therefore they cannot ſpeake of grace.

2 Signe.

Secondly, They are ſo conſtant in their wickedneſſe, (Mens immota manet) that as a full veſſell cannot eaſily be removed; ſo all the preaching in the world cannot make them to alter their lewd and wicked courſes.

3 Signe.

Thirdly, They are ſo full of ſinnes, that there is no roome in them for grace, becauſe nothing can receive but his fullneſſe.

4 Signe.

Fourthly, They corrupt others, and ſpeake of wicked blaſphemy, and their talking is againſt the moſt higheſt; and ſo their ſinnes doe flow and overflow the whole Countrey; to ſhew indeed that they are full and more then full of ſinnes.

Secondly,

Secondly, the Apostles and Disciples, and all good Christians being replenished with Gods Spirit, they have the same properties, but in a farre different sense: For 2 In the godly.

First, if God should knocke on these vessels with the fingers of afflictions, with any plagues or troubles, yet they murmure not at any thing, they open not their mouthes whatsoever they suffer; but they rejoyce in tribulation, that they are counted worthy to suffer any thing for the name of Christ.

1 Signe.

Acts 5.41.

Secondly, they stand constant in their profession; that neither life nor death can remove them from their most holy faith.

2 Signe. Rom. 8.35.

And yet here you must not think that the constancy of standing, while a man is full of Gods Spirit, doth imply a necessity of continuing full with the said graces; for though the Holy Ghost sate upon the Apostles, and they stood firme while he sate on them, or remained in them; yet for their sinnes, if they take not heed, this Spirit may be taken from them, (as he was from Saul) and their candlesticks may be removed, as they were from the seven Churches of Asia; and he that standeth, may soone fall, if he doth not warily looke unto his waies; for though the gifts and graces of God be, αμεταμελητα, without repentance; that is, though the saving grace of God, being once received by the elect, can never after totally be extinguished; yet those gifts and graces which are commonly given, (as we see) many times to the bad as well as to the good, or els for the edifying of the Church, may wholly cease, and be extinguished; as we read of Nicolas the Deacon, on whom the Spirit sate, and was one of them that were filled with the Holy Ghost, if S. Augustine, S. Gregory, Lorinus, and others judgement be to be followed, and yet fell from the faith, as Bonaventure collecteth against S. Chrysostome. But from hence it is well concluded, that as all or most of the Apostles and disciples that were here filled, did continue unto the end, as our Saviour requireth; so it sheweth that we should be all, not like the Egyptian dogs at Nilus, Qui bibunt & fugiunt; which, for feare of crocodiles, do take a snatch of the river, and then slinke away, but very carefull to give attendance every man in his calling, donec venerit, untill our Master commeth, and never to slinke away.

1 Sam. 16.15.

The saving graces once given, are neither finally nor totally taken away, but the common graces are oftentimes taken away from the wicked, by reason of their wickednesse.

Thirdly, they forsooke all and followed Christ; there was no roome in their hearts for worldly vanities, and they deemed them but as dung and drosse, as the Apostle calleth them.

3 Signe. Mat 19.27.

Fourthly, as the little Well in Hester grew into a great river, and flowed over with great waters; so now the Apostles being filled with the Holy Ghost, they powre out the graces of God over all the face of the earth to renew it, as the waters of Noah prevailed to destroy it; for now, they speake with other tongues, as the Spirit gives them utterance.

4 Signe. Hest. 10 6. in Apocryph.

And yet here we must observe, that although they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and that from them all the graces of Gods Spirit did flow and overflow the earth; yet they had not all the same measure of grace; and therefore that grace could not flow in the same measure from them all; for as Richardus de sancto Victore doth well observe, there is infusio, defusio, & effusio gratiæ; A giving of a quantity of some grace; and there is a filling with a fulnesse of grace; and there is a superabundancy of grace; or there is a small, and a middle, and a super-ordinary measure of grace: and so we find it both in the Preachings and in the Pennings of these Apostles: for Iames staid only in Ierusalem, and the major part of the rest preached over all the world; Iude writ but one Epistle, and that one a very short one; and most of them writ nothing at all; but S. John and S. Paul writ very much: and therefore of those (as well Preachers as others) which have received grace, not only to sanctifie themselves, but also to edifie the Church, we must not expect the same measure of fruits from all: For young men, and the meaner schollers cannot do so profoundly as the graver Divines can do; and the older men cannot do it so often as the younger sort can do; and yet neither must be contemned; for if the young men had had the time of the aged, no doubt but they

That the Apostles received not all, the like measure of grace.

That we must not expect the same measure of fruits from all men.

Ariſtale. they would do as well as the aged: Et ſi ſenex haberet oculum juvenis, videret ut juvenis; And if the ancient men had the ſtrength and bodies of young men, it is not unlikely but that they would ſtill take paines as young men. Neither do I ſay this to uphold ſloth or negligence in any age, for to our uttermoſt ability (as I ſaid before) we muſt all labour and continue conſtant unto death, but to reprove our partiall age that adoreth the Sun riſingin the Eaſt, and applaudeth the quicke wits and many Sermons of youth, but makes none account of aged Paul, and the beſt labours of declining age, unleſſe, with the Iſraelites, they can make up the ſame tale of bricks as they did in youth, though they have neither ſtraw nor ſtubble, neither ſight of eyes, nor ſtrength of bodies to performe it, and to ſhew how every man ſhould do his beſt, juxta menſuram donationis Chriſti, according to that meaſure of grace, which he hath received from Chriſt.

Philemon v 9.

And ſo much for the filling of the Apoſtles with the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt.

CHAP. V.

Of the effects and fruits of their filling with the Holy Ghoſt, and how this Spirit ſealeth them, and ſheweth them to be the true ſervants of Ieſus Chriſt.

3 The fruits and effects of the Holy Ghoſt.

THirdly, for the effects of their filling, it is ſaid, that they began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance; where you muſt obſerve,

Firſt, that they began to ſpeake, becauſe the Spirit of God is never idle, but where it ſees cauſe, will ſpeak, though it ſhould coſt the ſpeakers life.

Secondly, that they ſpake with other tongues; that is, not as carnall men, talking of fleſhly or worldly matters, nor as wicked prophane wretches, belching forth blaſphemia in Deum, blaſphemies againſt God, but as regenerate and ſanctified men, they ſhew forth magnalia Dei, the wonderfull works of God.

And hereby all men might know whether they were the ſervants of Chriſt, by this Spirit of Chriſt; for as our Saviour ſaith of the falſe Apoſtles, the ſame is true of all Apoſtles, By their fruits ye ſhall know them; For as in whomſoever the ſpirit of Satan is, you ſhall ſee that he will reveale them by their lewd words, and by their wicked works, which are the works of darkneſſe; So in whomſoever the Spirit of God is, he will ſeale them, and mark them with a fourefold mark, ſaith Bonaventure, that is,

Mat.7.16.

The Holy Ghoſt ſealeth us with a fourefold ſeale.

Signo	1 Veritatis eredendorum.	1 With true Religion.
	2 Honeſtatis morum.	2 With an upright converſation.
	3 Contemptus mundanorum.	3 With contempt of vanity.
	4 Charitatis Dei & proximorum.	4 With perfect charity.

1 Faith is the root of all graces.

Firſt, it worketh faith in their hearts, for this is the fundamentall root of all other graces, and therefore the Apoſtle well obſerveth out of the Prophet, that a man firſt believeth, and then ſpeaketh; for we have believed (ſaith he) and therefore have we ſpoken; whereas if they had not believed, they would never have ſpoken of the wonderfull works of God: and therefore the Holy Ghoſt did firſt work faith in their hearts, and then it cauſed the ſame to ſpeake and to expreſſe it ſelfe, by this preaching of the works of God. And

2 Good works, which are

Secondly, becauſe the verity of our faith is ever knowne by the ſincerity of our life, therefore theſe ſignes ſhall follow them that believe.

1 To ſuppreſſe ſin. Greg. de 7 pec. Magdal.

Firſt, They ſhall caſt out divels, that is, vitia voluptatis; they ſhall ſuppreſſe all ſinnes, as S. Gregory expounds it; becauſe every ſinne is as bad as the divell.

2 To praiſe God.

Secondly, They ſhall ſpeake with new tongues, that is, utter forth verba utilitatis, holy and heavenly words; and becauſe our naturall tongues were like the poyſon of aſpes, theſe may well be called new tongues, when they do ſing a new ſong.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, They shall take up serpents, that is, concupiscentias sensualitatis, the biting and poysonous concupiscences of our sensuall flesh shalbe, though not quite taken away from them, yet they shall be taken up in their hands, (as Hercules is said to have held the two serpents which Iuno sent to devoure him, in both his hands, while he was but a child in his cradle) and they shall be so restrained and held fast, that they shall not be able to do them violence. 3 To bridle their lusts.

Fourthly, If they drinke any deadly poyson, it shall not hurt them, that is, injurias adversitatis; if they must swallow down lies and slanders, yet for all the malice and the mischiefe of the wicked, Non inflammantur per superbiam, non suffocantur per malitiam, non disrumpuntur per invidiam; they shall neither swell with envy, nor burst with malice, nor any waies perish through their indignity, but in their patience they shall possesse their soules. And 4 To beare all injuries. Luke 21.19.

Fiftly, They shall lay hands on the sicke, and they shall recover them, that is, adjutoria charitatis, & remedia iniquitatis; they shall exercise such deeds of charity, that by their good counsels and admonitions, they shall recover many a languishing dying soule, and bring them back againe to saving health. And 5 To do good unto all men.

Thirdly, because these things cannot be practised, unlesse the pompe and pride of worldly vanities be quite contemned and troden under feet, therefore the Spirit of God worketh in them a mind to forsake all worldly things. And 3 Contempt of vanities.

Fourthly, because no work is good unlesse it proceedeth from the root of charity, therefore the Spirit of God diffuseth this love into the hearts of his servants, that they wish no evill to any man, but are ready to do good, even to them that hate them. 4 Of charity. Rom. 5.5.

And these foure seales and signes of Gods Spirit are expressed Rev. 12. where S. Iohn saw a woman cloathed with the Sun, and the Moone under her feet, and upon her head a crowne of twelve Starres, and she being with child, cried, travelling in birth and paine, to be delivered; For this woman signifieth the Church of Christ, or every faithfull Christian soule; And Apoc. 12.1.

1 Her Sun-like shining is the brightnesse of her good works and heavenly conversation, which doth so shine before men, that they glorifie God which is in heaven. Mat. 5.16.

2 The Moone under her feet signifieth her contemning and trampling under feet all the vaine and variable things of this sublunary world.

3 Her crowne of twelve starres is the symbole of her faith, containing twelve articles of her beliefe. And Mat. 19.27.

4 Her paine to be delivered, is that earnest desire and love which every Christian soule hath to increase and multiply the number of Gods children. Heb. 13.18.

And so the Holy Ghost having descended upon the Apostles, and remaining in their hearts, it caused them

1 To believe, and to compose that crowne of twelve starres, (which is the glory of every Christian soule) that is, the twelve articles of our faith, as the Church receiveth it.

2 To forsake all the world, and to follow Christ, as S. Peter sheweth.

3 To lead a most upright and a godly life, as S. Paul avoucheth. And

4 To labour incessantly night and day, to send out their voices into all lands, and their words unto the ends of the world, as now the whole world testifieth.

And so you see how in the first beginning of the Church the gifts of the Holy Ghost were visibly and abundantly given unto these servants of Iesus Christ, according as it was prophecied long before, that he would powre out his Spirit upon all flesh, and so their sonnes and their daughters should prophesie. Ioel 2.28.

CHAP. VI.

How the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit are now given unto us, and how we may know whether we have the same or not.

2 How God doth now bestow his graces upon us.

SEcondly, Christ doth now give his Spirit otherwise unto the Pastours of his Church, sufficiently for the edifying of the same, but through great paines, and diligent searching after knowledge; for now we must not looke for Enthusiasmes, nor thinke to attaine unto learning and knowledge by revelations; but orando, & quarendo, & bene vivendo; by earnest prayers, by continuall watching, and tumbling, and tossing of many bookes, and by wearing and wearying out our selves in reading, musing, and writing of many lines, we must seeke to attaine to a little learning: and when we haue done all we can, we can get nothing but what this blessed Spirit please to give us: for except the Lord build the house the builder laboureth but in vaine; so except hee doth blesse our studies, all our paines and industry will prove no better, then Æthiopum lavare, to wash a blacke-moore; a breaking of our braines, but an attaining to no true knowledge.

Psal 127.1.

But we may be certaine, that if we doe our duties, in all humility to seeke and search for grace, our God will most surely give us grace, yea, and the same graces, (though not in the same manner, or according to the same measure) which he did give unto his Apostles. And as here it was apparantly seene that these Apostles had the gifts of this Spirit, by these signes and effects of this Spirit; so we may most certainely know, (if we will diligently search) whether we haue these gifts and graces of Gods spirit or not, by the workes that we doe, and by the things that we finde in our selves: for Si injurias dimittimus, quod denotat columba, si pœnitentiæ lachrymis irrigamur, quod nubes, si desiderium habemus rerum æternarum, quod ignis, si magnalia Dei annuntiamus, quod lingua, tum habemus signum præsentiæ Spiritus sancti; If wee water our couch with our teares and be truely sorry for our sinnes, which is signified by the cloud: if wee be purged from all the drosse of sinne, and be elevated to desire and love heavenly things, which is noted in the fire; if we be carried against the naturall streame and current of our owne corruptions, which is shewed by the winde; if we remit and forgive all wrongs done unto us, and be meeke and gentle unto all men, harsh and sullen unto none, which are the properties of the Dove; and if wee zealously preach and pray, and talke of God, and of his will, his grace and goodnesse towards us, and render thankes and praise unto him for the same, which is the office of a fiery tongue: then we doe with the Apostles shew the effects of Gods Spirit; and wee may to our endlesse comforts assure our selves that the Spirit of God is in us. But if we finde none of these things, no hatred of sinne, no love of vertue, no loathing of the vanities of this world, no lifting up of our hearts to heaven, no meekenesse with men, no praising of God, but rather finde our selves cleane contrary, defiled with sinne, deboist in our lives, injuring men, offending God, blaspheming his name with wicked oathes, and breaking his Sabbaths with great contempt; then we should not onely wonder to see the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit in others, as the people did when they saw what had happened unto the Apostles upon the day of Pentecost; but we should rather bewaile and lament the want of the same in our selves; for it is unpossible that they should have any part or portion of Gods Spirit, that doe shew no signs nor fruit of Gods grace.

The signes whereby we may know whether we have the Spirit of God or no.

1.Cor.3.85.

That we should diligently examine whether we have Gods Spirit or not.

1 Way of triall

And therefore every man should try and examine himselfe, whether he find in himselfe the fruits and effects of Gods Spirit or not; For.

First, the holy Ghost, being like water, if he be in you, then you are washed and cleansed from all filthinesse; and you are like the trees that are planted by by the waters side, and doe bring forth their fruits in due season: but if you be like a barren and drie ground where no water is, or like fruitlesse trees that beare nothing but leaves, then certainely the Spirit of God is not in you, and you are fit for nothing but to be hewen downe, and to be cast into the fire. Psalme 1.3. Matth.3.10.

Secondly, the holy Ghost being like fire, if he be in us, he illuminateth the eyes of our understanding, and he giveth light to them that sit in darknesse and in the shadow of death, that they may walke without stumbling, in the way of peace; but if our understanding be so darkened, that we neither know God nor the will of God, then certainely the Spirit of God is not in us; for if our Gospell be hid, (saith the Apostle) it is hid to them that are lost, that being deprived and void of Gods Spirit, are filled with the spirit of darknesse. A most fearefull saying against them that understand not the great mystery of godlinesse, that they have the marke of lost ones; and if he be in us, then we must needs be fervent and zealous to do al good service unto God, as Apollo was, who is said to be hot in spirit, or as the twelve tribes were, who served God night and day instantly, saith the Apostle: but if we be cold and careless to serve the Lord, then surely we are destitute of this Spirit of God; for how can a man carry fire in his bosome, and not be burnt? so how can we have the fire of Gods Spirit in our hearts, and not be fervent to all good works? 2. Way of triall. 2. Cor. 4 3. Act. 18. 25. c. 16. 7. Prov. 6 27.

Thirdly, the holy Ghost being like a Dove, if he be in us, then we are meeke and lowly in heart; for this heavenly Dove remaineth in none but those that are Doves: but if with the Ducke (that flying aloft among the wilde Duckes, did presently alight, and so brought them all with her into her owners net, whereof Alciat saith, 3 Way of triall. Alciat. de Anate.

Perfida cognato se sanguine polluit ales
Officiosa alijs, exitiosa suis.

They doubting not her trayterous heart at all,
Did flie with her, and downe with her did fall,)

We doe deceive our friends, and wrong our neighbours; then surely this Dove-like spirit of God is not in us; for this holy spirit of discipline flieth from deceit; and the fruit of this spirit is all meekenesse, gentlenesse, and goodnesse. Wisdome 1. Gal. 5. 22.

Fourthly, the holy Ghost being like winde, if he be in us, then all the dust of vanitie is scattered from our hearts; and our soules are carried against the streame of naturall desires, to wish and long for heavenly things. And 4 Way of triall.

Fiftly the holy Ghost being like tongues; if he be in us, then our tongues will be like the pen of a ready-writer, and our talking will be of the most highest; Quia ex abundantia cordis os loquitur; & loquela tua te manifestum facit; because a religious heart will ever expresse it selfe by a godly and a religious tongue; for as with the heart man beleeveth unto righteousnesse, so with the tongue confession is made unto salvation; but if we talke lasciviously, and speake all words that may doe hurt; if the poyson of aspes be under our lippes, and the holy name of God, or the good fame of men be evill spoken of through us, then surely, surely, this holy spirit of God is not in us. And if he be not in thee, then I advise thee to seeke him while he may bee found; for the time will come, when thee cannot bee found, that is, cum optaverimus salutem in medio gehennæ, quæ facta est & prædicata est in medio terræ; when wee shall wish for salvation in the midst of Hell, which was wrought, and is preached in the midst of the earth: and therefore now while it is to day, wee ought to seeke unto him, and to pray with the Prophet David, yea and to pray earnestly, that God would renue his spirit within us, and stablish us with his free spirit; for, whosoever hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his, the same hath no comfort in the world, no assurance of his salvation, no Faith, no Hope, no God, no good. 5 Way of triall. Psal. 45 2. Matth. 12 34. Rom. 10. 10. If we have not the spirit, we ought to seeke him. Bern ser 75 in cam. Psal. 51 10. Rom 8 9.

But if by the infallible rules thou findest, that thou hast the spirit, and canst say with that worthy Martyr of our Church, I have it, I have it, as he went unto the stake to be burned, then remember what the Apostle speaketh, grieve not the spirit, quench not the spirit; spill not this water, lest that spilling this oyle thy If we have the spirit of God we ought not to grieve him. 1. Thess 5. 19.

lampe

Luk 11.26. 2 Pet. 2.20.

A fearefull thing to be deprived of Gods ſpirit. Iudg 16.20. 1. Sam.

lampe goeth out: and then, thy laſt end will be far worſe then thy beginning; and it had beene better for thee, never to have knowne it, then to turne aſide from the holy Commandement: for as Sampſon and Saul having the ſpirit of God, lived honourably and did performe moſt worthy exploits; but having loſt the ſame by their ſinnes, they became in their lives moſt miſerable, and in their deaths moſt lamentable; even ſo it will happen from the Lord, unto all back-ſliders, unto all them that quench the ſpirit: therefore (I ſay) grieve him not, quench him not.

How Preachers may know whether they have the gifts to edifie the Church.

But becauſe the chiefeſt of theſe gifts for the collecting, and the edifying of the Church, is the gift of tongues, wherby the Miniſters are inabled for the preaching of Gods Word; therefore, wee that are Preachers ſhould here chiefely looke whether we have this gift of tongues or not; for 1 Way. Pſal. 45.2.

Firſt, if our tongues be the pens of a ready writer, that we can readily ſpeake of the things that we have made unto the King, and Preach the Word of Truth in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon;

2 Way Luke 12.42.

Secondly, if theſe our tongues be not double tongues, but cloven tongues, that is, able to divide the Word of God aright, and to give unto every man his owne portion in due ſeaſon; that is, mercy and comforts unto the repentant ſoules, and woes and judgment unto the obſtinate tranſgreſſours, and to teach Faith and workes, love to God and man;

3 Way. Numb. 12.21 30. 1 Sam. 25 36.

Thirdly, if theſe our cloven tongues be of fire; that is, uſed rather to gaine ſoules, then to get applauſe, or to gather wealth; to draw men to glorifie God, and not to magnifie our ſelves; then we may be aſſured, we have received a part and portion of theſe gifts and graces of Gods ſpirit.

But if we be like thoſe great clarkes, which they ſay are rare Schollers, but never man was heard to be the better for their learning; they have it in them, like the fire in the flint-ſtone, but it never comes out of them; they are loth to preach, they are loth to write, for then perhaps they ſhould not be deemed ſo learned as now they are judged to be; for a foole holding his peace may be thought to be wiſe: or if we be like Balaams Aſſe, that never ſpake but twice in al her life; or uſe to preach as Naball feaſted, once a yeere, when they receive their rents; or if we would preach, and cannot, but it were better for us not to preach at all, then to preach ſo idly, and ſo fooliſhly as we doe; or if we preach more for profit, or the praiſe of men, then for the glory of God; then aſſuredly we doe proclaime unto the world, that we have not yet received theſe gifts of fierie cloven tongues from God.

Bope Vrbanes letter. Uſſher de Chriſt. eccleſ.

Urbanus writes unto Baldwin Arch-biſhop of Canterburie, Monacho ferventiſſimo, Abbati calido, Epiſcopo lepido, Archi-epiſcopo remiſſo; and ſo it was ſaid of Alexander the ſixt,

De vitio in vitium, de flamma tranſit in ignem:

They grew worſe and worſe, as they did grow greater and greater; and I pray God it bee not true among us; that high preferment ſpoyle not many a Preacher. I ſay no more: but ſo you ſee, how the gifts which are given for the edifying of Gods Church, were given unto the Apoſtles, and how ever ſince, they are given unto all other Preachers.

CHAP. VII.

How the gifts and graces that are given for the ſanctifying of our ſoules are conferred and beſtowed upon men.

2 By what means we receive the grace of God. 2 By the outward meanes that God appointed.

SEcondly, for the other gifts and graces that are given for the ſanctifying of our ſoules, they were, and are given ever after the ſame manner, that is,

Firſt, by thoſe outward meanes which God hath appointed; and

Secondly, by the inward working of his bleſſed ſpirit; for, though I confeſſe with Saint Auguſtine and others, that God can ſpeake by his ſpirit, in occulto, and and teach our ſpirits in ſilentio to cry Abba Father; yet we find that ordinarily all the gifts and graces of God, as Faith, Hope, Charity, Patience and all other graces whatſoever, are wrought in us by thoſe meanes which God hath appointed for this purpoſe; and they are two.

1 The hearing of Gods Word.
2 The receiving of the bleſſed Sacraments.

All graces come by hearing Gods Word, and by receiving of his Sacraments.

First, we find that the beſt way to attaine unto any gift of grace, is to heare the Preaching of Gods Word; becauſe prayer, by which all graces are obtained, is the fruit of faith, and faith commeth by hearing, ſaith the Apoſtle.

1 By hearing Gods Word. Rom. 10. 17.

Neither is it every kind of hearing that will ſuffice to obtaine grace; for as there be many that can receive no grace, becauſe, like the deafe Adders, they will not heare at all; ſo there be as many that can receive but very little grace; becauſe they heare amiſſe: I have read it in Erſmus, that Demoſthenes on a time, diſcourſing ſeriouſly of neceſſary conſiderations of State-buſineſſe, all his Auditors fell aſleepe; the Orator to awaken them, ſaid he had a pretty ſtory to relate unto them, viz. that a young man hired an aſſe from Athens to Megara, and in the heat of the day, he couched under the aſſe, to take the benefit of her ſhadow; the owner denied him the uſe of the aſſes ſhadow, ſaying, he hired the aſſe and not her ſhadow: and therefore he ſhould not have it, unleſſe he would anew compound for it; the young man ſaid, he would have the advantage of his bargaine; with that they fell from words to blowes; and ſo Demoſthenes ſtaid his ſpeech; whereupon all his Auditors deſired him to go on, that they might heare the iſſue of that Tragedy; the Orator replied, I diſcourſed of the ſafety of your Common-wealth, and you fell aſleepe; and now I told you a Tale of an Aſſe, and ſee how attentive you are to it; and ſo he reproved the madneſſe of his people: Even ſo, we have many hearers that are more attentive unto triſling words, and more delighted with the forme and phraſes, than they are with the ſubſtance of the matter, like unto little children, that love the gilded out-ſide of the booke, better than all the wiſdome that is therein contained; or the laces of their coat, better than the coat it ſelfe: And ſome we have like the Egyptians about the fall of Nilus, that at the firſt were much affrighted at the hideous noiſe thereof, but within a little while after they were accuſtomed with the ſame, they were no waies moved thereat; ſo they, like Agrippa, at the firſt hearing of the Word preached, are ſomthing touched with the ſenſe of their ſinnes, but within a very little while, they grow careleſſe of all goodneſſe; others like the Auditors in Strabo, that attentively heard the Philoſopher, untill the market-bell of their profit did ring, and then they left him all alone; or rather like the hearers of S. Paul, which gave him audience, untill he touched their hearts with their unbeliefe; ſo our men will heare us, if it be not againſt their worldly profit, and they will heare placentia, ſuch things as are pleaſing for them: Others heare ſo much, that in very deed they domothing els but heare; for they never practice any thing at all, but the practice of iniquity; they will heare a Sermon every day, two for failing, three ſomtimes, but they will not forſake one ſin for a whole yeares Sermons; they heare them to be wiſer, not to be better: Ah wretched men that you are!

Demoſthenes ſtory of the ſhadow of the aſſe.

Fooliſh hearers.

The Egyptians about the fall of Nilus. Acts 26. 28.

Cuſtomary hearers.

Worldly hearers.

Only hearers and no doers.

——procul hinc, procul ite profani;

Why will you heare Gods Lawes, and yet hate to be reformed? for this will turne to your further condemnation; not becauſe you do heare Gods Word, which is good; but becauſe you do not do that which you heare to be good: And ſo we have many other ſorts of hearers, that by their hearing do receive no grace, becauſe they heare amiſſe.

And therefore not all hearers, but all thoſe that take heed how they heare; that do heare that they may underſtand, and underſtand that they may practiſe, and practiſe that they may pleaſe their God; thoſe do receive the gifts and graces of God.

2 The receiving of the Sacraments a moſt excellent means to beget all graces.

Secondly, we know that the bleſſed Sacraments are moſt excellent meanes to beget faith, and love, and all other graces in the worthy receivers of the ſame; for they be verba viſibilia Evangelij, ſuch things as do viſibly ſhew unto our eyes all that the Word of God doth teach and ſpeak unto our eares; for what is the ſumme of Gods Word and of all the preaching in the world, but that Ieſus Chriſt ſuffered, and died for our ſinnes, that we through him might have eternall life? And what can ſhew this more plainly than the bleſſed Sacraments do! For in Baptiſme we ſee, how the child is regenerate and borne anew, and ingrafted into Chriſt; and as the water cooleth all the ſcorching heat of the fleſh, and waſheth away all filthineſſe from our bodies, and maketh every thing fruitfull, ſo the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit doth coole in us the heat of our ſhefhly concupiſcence, and cleanſeth us from all ſinnes, and maketh us to abound in all good works: and in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper we do moſt apparently ſee, that, as the Bread which is broken, and then given us to be eaten for to ſtrengthen our heart, and to ſuſtaine our life; and the Wine is powred out, and given us to drink it for to comfort our hearts; ſo Chriſt was broken in pieces (as I ſhewed in my Treatiſe of his Paſſion) for our ſinnes; and his blood was powred out to make ſatisfaction for our tranſgreſſions; and ſo he is given unto us, as the food of our ſoules, and the only joy of our heart to ſuſtaine us, to refreſh us, and to be our only comforter in all diſtreſſe. And the conſideration of theſe viſible things ſhould as effectually work in us, faith to believe in him, hope to expect all good from him, and charity, for all received graces, moſt entirely to love him, and to be truly thankfull unto him for the ſame, and ſo to worke in us patience to ſuffer, as he hath ſuffered, love one towards another, as he hath loved us, and ſo all other graces whatſoever, as the audible declaration of them, expreſſed by the Preacher, doth unto our eares: for as it was the manner in old time, not only verbally to declare, but alſo by certaine viſible ſignes to expreſſe memorable things; that ſo it might make the more impreſſion in their minds; as the Ægyptians by their hyeroglyphicks; and Zedekiah the ſonne of Cenaanah made him hornes of iron, and ſaid unto Ahab, Thus ſaith the Lord, with theſe thou ſhalt puſh the Syrians, untill thou haſt conſumed them; and Agabus tooke the girdle of S. Paul, and bound his own hands and feet, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Holy Ghoſt; ſo ſhall the Iewes at Ieruſalem bind the man that oweth this girdle, and ſhall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles; ſo the Lord uſeth all means, preaching unto our eares, by the beſt intelligible voices, and ſhewing unto our eyes, by moſt plaine ſignificant ſignes, what Chriſt hath done for us; thereby to make us all to underſtand and to believe the ſame.

How the Sacraments ſhew us all that the Scripture teacheth.

The cuſtome of ancient time to expreſſe their minds by viſible ſignes.

1 King. 22, 11.

Acts 21, 11.

But as all kind of hearing, ſo all kind of receiving theſe bleſſed Sacraments is not ſufficient to beget faith and other graces in the receivers; for we read that there be foure kinds of receivers of the bleſſed Sacraments.

Foure ſorts of receivers of the Sacraments.

1 Sort. We may receive Chriſt, though we want the Sacraments.

Aug. Tract 17 & 27. de verb. Apoſt.

First, ſome receive them ſpiritually onely; that is, the matter of the Sacraments; which are, the gifts and graces of Ieſus Chriſt, but not the Sacraments themſelves; ſo Theodoſius was baptized and ingrafted into Chriſt by grace, though he wanted the outward meanes, as S. Ambroſe ſaith: and ſo all the elected children that die before they can be partakers of the Lords Supper, non manducantes manducant, not eating the Sacramentall bread, do notwithſtanding eat Ieſus Chriſt: Quia manducare illam eſcam & illum bibere potum, eſt in Chriſto manere, & Chriſtum in ſe manentem habere; becauſe that to eat the fleſh of Chriſt, and to drinke his bloud, is to be ingrafted into Chriſt, to be united and made one with Chriſt; and ſo to have Chriſt dwelling in us, and us in him; and therefore we find that Chriſt doth not only ſay, he that commeth to me, that is, to eat me, ſhall not hunger, and he that believeth in me, ſhall never thirſt, to ſhew that there is no difference betwixt believing in him, and drinking of him; but alſo the very ſame things are promiſed as well to the believers in him, as to the eaters of his fleſh, and the drinkers of his bloud; for in Iohn 6. 47. he ſaith, He that believeth in me hath everlaſting life, and in Verſ. 51 of the ſame Chap. he ſaith, If any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever; and ſo the very ſame things are threatned aſwell againſt the not believers in him, as the not eaters of his fleſh;

To believe in Chriſt is to eat and drink Chriſt.

for

for in Vers. 53. he saith, except ye eat the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, you have no life in you; and in Vers. 64. he saith, there are some of you that believe not; to teach us, that as S. Augustine saith, Credere in Christum est manducare panem vivum, to believe truly in Christ, is to eat the flesh of Christ.

Secondly, some do receive them Sacramentally onely, that is, the outward signes and elements only; but not the gifts and graces thereby taught and signified: So the Fathers that came out of Egypt, were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud, and did all eat of the same spirituall meat, and did all drinke of the same spirituall drinke, that is, as we do, though in other signes; for they dranke of that spirituall rocke which followed them, and that rocke was Christ, that is, signified and taught them Christ; and yet many of them perished in the wilderness, Quia manducantes non manducabant; because they were wicked and did only receive the outward signes, and did not receive the inward grace that was signified and offered unto them, under those Sacramentall signes; so the Pharisees had the Sacrament of Circumcision; yet our Saviour tels them that being wicked, they were the sonnes of hell, and the children of their father the divell: And in the time of the New Testament they had the Sacrament of Baptisme, for Iohn Baptist baptized many of them, and Simon Magus was baptized by an Apostle, and Iudas received the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; and yet we see they reaped no fruit thereby, because they received them only Sacramentally, outwardly, and did not believe; and therefore received not those blessings and graces which these Sacraments taught and pointed at.

2 Sort. To receive outward Sacraments, and not the grace signified, will availe us nothing. 1 Cor. 10. 2, 3, 4.

Iohn 8. 44.

Thirdly, some receive neither the Sacraments, nor the graces signified by the Sacraments; so all Hereticks that neither rightly believe in Christ, nor yet truly receive the Sacraments according to the institution of Christ, do neither receive grace, nor yet any signe of grace.

3 Sort. Hereticks do neither receive Christ, nor the Sacraments of Christ.

Fourthly, some receive the true Sacraments; because they receive them, as they are delivered by Christ himself; and they receive the true graces, that is, all the benefits of Iesus Christ, taught, manifested and exhibited unto us by those Sacraments; such are all the faithfull and the worthy receivers of the same; Quia manducantes manducant, because that receiving these, they feed by faith on Iesus Christ, and do most truly apply unto their owne soules, what grace or vertue soever is signified and shewed by these outward signes and schoole-masters of all true Christians.

4 Sort. The worthy receivers of the Sacraments do hereby receive Christ and all his graces.

And therefore if we would obtaine the graces and blessings of God, by the meanes of the blessed Sacraments, let us examine our selves, that we may be worthy receivers of the same: We find in the Law, that three sorts of men were excluded from the Paschall Lamb,

Three sorts of men excluded from the paschall Lamb.

That is,
1 The uncircumcised, according to the covenant of God with Abraham.
2 The strangers, from the common wealth of Israel.
3 Those that were uncleane, according to the ceremonies of their Lawes.

Exod. 12. 43. 48.

To teach us, that the unreverent, the unbelievers, and the ungodly, great and grievous sinners should not presume to meddle with these blessed Sacraments; for as the covenant of Gods grace, so these signes of the covenant belongeth not to any wicked man, so long as he remaineth wicked: And therefore, least (as the men of Bethshemesh were slaine, fifty thousand and threescore and ten men in one day, because they looked into the arke, which belonged only unto the Priests) we be found guilty of the body and bloud of Christ, and so pull upon our selves swift damnation, if we snatch the childrens bread, that belongeth not to us, or receive these blessed Sacraments unworthily, let us, with blind Bartimaus, cast off our mantles, the old rags of Adam, the lusts of the flesh, and let us put on our wedding garment, the new man, which chiefly consisteth of faith towards God, and love towards men, if, when we come to receive these Sacraments, we would receive the grace of Christ. But Indignè fumâ si sumu non reverenter, Vel non catholicè, vel habens mortale scienter.

1 am 6 19.

Mat 10. 30.

2 By the inward working of Gods Spirit.

Outward works to no end, if God gives not his Spirit.

Secondly, though ſuch a hearing of the Word, as I have above ſhewed, be a ſpeciall meanes to obtaine grace; yet we muſt know, that this meanes is not ſufficient, unleſſe, as God opened the heart of Lydia, when Saint Paul preached unto her eares, ſo he doth worke faith in our hearts, when we do preach and expound the Word unto your eares; Quia inanis eſt ſermo docentis niſi ſpiritus adſit cordi audientis; becauſe, as the Preaching of the Word is the gift of God in us; ſo the beleeving of the ſame is the operation of the ſame God in you; And ſo likewiſe, though the receiving of the bleſſed Sacraments be a ſingular meanes, to worke Faith and all other graces in the right receivers of the ſame; yet we muſt underſtand, that it is not opus operatum, the doing of the worke that begetteth grace in any man, but the ſpirit of God onely convayeth grace, through the conduit pipes of theſe outward meanes: and therefore we ſhould alwaies pray to God, not onely for the graces of attention unto our eares, and illumination unto our eyes, but alſo of ſanctification unto our hearts, that what wee doe attentively heare with our eares, and do moſt perfectly ſee with our eyes, we may moſt faithfully believe with our hearts, and ſo attaine unto theſe gifts and graces of Gods Spirit.

CHAP. VIII.

On whom God beſtoweth theſe gifts and graces of his Spirit.

3 On whom God beſtoweth his gifts.

FOr the third, that is, to whom God beſtoweth theſe gifts, wee muſt know that hee beſtoweth neither the graces of edifying the Church, nor the other graces, to ſanctifie and to ſave our ſoules, upon all men, but onely upon thoſe whom it pleaſeth him; for as when hee was to chooſe his Apoſtles, it is ſaid, that he choſe whom he pleaſed; ſo of the graaces of preſervation, ſanctification, and ſuch like, he giveth them to whom he pleaſeth; and though he giveth liberally unto all men, yet he giveth not all of theſe, nor any of them all, inconſiderately, unto any man; for he lets not his graes drop through his fingers, (as if he cared not what became of them) and ſo ſuffer all men to gather them, who will; but as a ſparrow lights not upon the ground without his providence, ſo not one grace fals to any man, without his ſpeciall guidance and direction: And this the Apoſtle ſheweth when he ſaith, Non eſt currentis, neq; volentis, ſed miſerentis Dei; It is not in him that runneth, nor in him that willeth, but in God that ſheweth mercy; and this Chriſt himſelfe declareth, when he ſaith, No man commeth unto me, except the Father draw him; ſo no man can receive theſe gifts and graces, but they to whom they are given; for as we find a gradation of the love and favour of God; As,

Mar.3.13.

Iames 1.15.

Mat.10.29.

Rom.9.16.

That there is a gradation in Gods love.

1 Degree.

First, he loveth all the things that he hath made; and

2 Degree.

Secondly, he loveth man in a more ſpeciall manner, above all the things that he made; And

3 Degree.

Thirdly, among men, he loveth ſome better than others; yea

4 Degree.

Why God loveth ſome men better than others.

Fourthly, among thoſe that he loveth beſt, he loveth ſome better than the reſt; as wee ſee hee loved Noah and Abraham among the Patriarchs, Moſes among the Prophets, and Iohn among the Apoſtles; ſo hee loves theſe beſt, not becauſe theſe were in themſelves better than any others; but becauſe it pleaſed him to love them better than others; for, as if hee had made a toad a man, and the man a toad, the toad had been the better of the twaine; ſo if he had beſtowed more grace upon the wicked, and with-held the ſame from the now beſt men in all reſpects, then no doubt but the wicked had been the beſt; but he loveth them beſt, becauſe it pleaſeth him ſo to do; and therefore he beſtoweth more graces and tokens of his love upon them, to make them better than all others whatſoever; for the gifts of God do make us good, and our goodneſſe maketh not him to beſtow his gifts on us.

And

What this doctrine teacheth us

And this I ſay, not to accuſe God of any niggardlineſſe or cloſe-handedneſſe, becauſe he giveth not theſe gifts unto all; God forbid; for he is a debter to no man, but may freely, without cenſure, do with his owne what he liſt; But I ſay this,

1 To behold the great goodneſſe of God to his elect

Firſt, to ſhew his exceeding great bounty and favour towards us, that deſerving no more good at Gods hands than all the reſt of the race of mankind, ſhould notwithſtanding when we juſtly deſerved ſo much evill, (it may be as much, or more than the reſt of men) receive ſo many great gifts and graces, above and before all the reſt of the world.

2 To be truly thankfull unto God.

Secondly, and ſpecially to move us to all thankefulneſſe to this our good and gracious God, that with-holding his graces from many thouſand others, he would notwithſtanding ſo graciouſly beſtow them upon us; for had not he given us the grace to believe in Chriſt, to hate our ſinnes, and to love all righteouſneſſe, I ſee not how the beſt of us could do any of theſe, no more than the wickedeſt men in the world: and therefore I would to God, that we would ever praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and declare the wonders that he doth, as generally for all men, ſo ſpecially, for theſe choſen children of men.

3 To pray for what we want, and to praiſe our God for evermore.

Thirdly and laſtly, to teach us, that when we feele our owne wants, we ſhould pray to him for helpe, to ſupply our need: And when we ſee any of our neighbours void of grace, we ſhould rather pionſly pitie them, and pray for them, than proudly to contemne them, and to ſpurne againſt them; for as, if God would, he might have made thee a beaſt, and the beaſt a man; ſo, if it had pleaſed him, he might have filled them with that grace which he beſtowed on thee, and he might have juſtly left thee in that fulneſſe of ſinne, wherein they do wallow: And therefore beholding the goodneſſe and ſeverity of God; on them, to whom he gives no grace, ſeverity; but towards thee, to whom he beſtoweth his gifts, goodneſſe, if thou continue in this goodneſſe; do thou praiſe thy God, and pray for them; that for his ſake that is aſcended up on high, and hath led captivity captive, God would be pleaſed to beſtow his gifts and graces unto men; that ſo all men may aſcribe and give all praiſe and glory unto him, which was, and is, and ſhall be, through him which was dead, and is alive, and liveth for evermore.

Amen.

A PRAYER.

O Most gracious God, which hast given thine onely Sonne Iesus Christ, to die for our sinnes, to rise againe from the dead, to ascend unto heaven, to prepare a place for us, and to send us thy holy Spirit to fill our hearts with all heavenly graces, which are necessary for the gathering of thy Church and the sanctifying of our soules, to prepare us unto eternall life; we most humbly beseech thee, to give us that grace to be truly thankfull unto thee for all thy graces; Increase our faith, stirre up our hope, and kindle our love both towards thee and towards all men for thy sake; and because all graces are begotten, increased, and preserved by the hearing of thy Word, and receiving of thy blessed Sacraments, we pray thee O Lord, to give us grace to heare thy Word attentively, to believe it faithfully, and to receive thy Sacraments worthily, that so being filled with thy Spirit, we may despise all worldly vanities, and have our conversations in heaven while we live on earth, and at last be received into that Kingdome which thou hast prepared for them that love thee, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

This Treatise containeth,

1. A most friendly compellation, where is handled,
   - 1. The unity of brethren, where is shewed,
     - 1. How dearely Heathen brethren in former times loved each other.
     - 2. How little love and unity is now among Christian brethren.
   - 2. The pollicy of the Apostle in seeking to win the Thessalonians to pray for them; — *Where is shewed that there bee three sorts of Preachers.
     - * 1. Discreete.
       2. Parasites to Princes.
       3. Flatterers of the people.

1. The pietie of the Apostle in perswading all men to pray: where is handled concerning prayer,
   - 1. The kinds of prayer.
     - 1. In respect of the matter,
       - 1. Invocation.
         - 1. To remove evill.
         - 2. *To obtaine good.
       - * 1. Grace, spirituall / 2. Peace, temporall — blessings.
       - 2. Thankesgiving which is inforced by many reasons, &c.
     - 2. In respect of the forme,
       1. Mentall.
       2. Vocall.
       3. Sudden.
       4. Composed.
       5. Conceived.
       6. Prescribed.
       7. Private.
       8. Publique.
       9. Ordinary.
       10. Extraordinary.
   - 2. The party to whom wee should pray, that is, God, for divers speciall reasons: as
     1. Because hee onely is Omnipresent.
     2. Because hee onely is Omniscient.
     3. Because hee onely is Omnipotent.
   - 3. The place where to pray,
     1. Generally: every where.
     2. Specially the Church: and that for five speciall reasons.
   - 4. The time when to pray,
     1. With our heart and affections alwaies.
     2. With our voice, at the appointed times.
        - 1. For our private prayers.
        - 2. *For our publike prayers.

* Where the neglectors of publique prayers are sharpely reprehended.

2. A most Christian request or exhortation, where is shewed

5. The manner how to pray; 1. In humility. 2. In faith. 3. In zeale. 4. With constancy. 5. In charity. 6. In piety.

6. The motives to perswade us to pray;

1. In respect of God; because prayer is an essentiall part of Gods service.

2. In respect of our selves

1. To obtaine our requests, 1. Whatsoever we aske. 2. More then we aske. 3. Better then we aske.

2. To prevent judgements.
3. To preserve all spirituall graces.
4. To weaken sinne.
5. To sanctifie the creatures.
6. To overcome all creatures.

7. To prevaile with God, 1. When he is pleased. 2. When hee is angry.

Where is shewed that the gift to pray, is the most excellent grace that God bestoweth on man.

2. The charity of the Apostle in shewing how we should pray one for another; where is shewed, that we must pray, 1. Specially for our selves. 2. Generally for all men, for three speciall reasons, and more particularly. *

* 1. For Kings and all Magistrates.
2. For our Ministers, and that for three speciall reasons, 1. Because wee owe this duty to pray for them. 2. For our owne good. 3. To helpe them *

* to discharge that great charge which is laide upon them: where is shewed the dangerous estate of Ministers whatsoever they do.

The

The ſeventh

Golden Candleſticke,

HOLDING

The ſeventh greateſt Light of Chriſtian

RELIGION.

Of the duty of CHRISTIANS.

1 THESSAL. 5. 25.

Ἀδελφοί, προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν.

Brethren, pray for us.

I Have ſhewed thee, O man, how man behaved himſelfe towards God, offending his Majeſty with hainous ſinnes; and I have ſhewed thee what God hath done for ſinnefull man, how hee ſent his onely begotten Sonne, to be made man, to ſuffer paine and ſorrow, and to die a curſed death for man, thereby to overcome all our enemies, ſinne, death and hell; to ariſe from the dead, to aſſure us of our deliverance; to aſcend into heaven, to prepare a place for us, and to ſend his holy and bleſſed Spirit into the hearts of men to fit them with the gifts and graces of the ſame, to prepare them for heaven; that the poore man might bathe himſelfe in the poole of Betheſda, and be made perfectly whole; that the wandering ſheepe might bee reduced and brought home upon this mans ſhoulders; and that ſinfull man might be reconciled and reunited unto God againe. And therefore now, Quid niſi vota ſupersunt? what remaineth ſaving onely prayers? to render thankes unto God for this great kindneſſe, and to aske thoſe things that be requiſite for us? and to teach us how to doe the ſame, I have choſen to treate of this ſhort Text, Brethren, pray for us.

The coherence of this Treatiſe with all the other Treatiſes.

It is a Text independent either of precedent or ſubſequent matter; and it containeth points of piety, points fit to be preached, and fitter to be practised, by your sacred Majesty, by the worthiest Nobles, by us Priests, by all men; and therefore da veniam Imperator; I humbly crave attention but a short time, to dilate upon this short Text, Brethren, pray for us. I may say of it, as S. Hierome said to Paulinus of the Catholike Epistles of Saint Peter, Saint Iohn, Saint Iames, and Saint Iude, Eas breves esse pariter, & longas, that they were short in words, but full of matter; for herein our blessed Apostle, (as was said of that famous Hystorian) Verborum numero sententiarum numerum comprehendit) in this paucity of words hath couched plenty of matter; the parts are two,

The diuision of the Text,

1. A most friendly compellation, Brethren,
2. A most Christian requeste or exhortation, pray for us.

Out of the first I note these two things,

1. His affection, whereby we are taught to live in unity;
2. His discretion, whereby we may observe a Christian pollicy, not such as is abusively, though commonly so termed in the world; but such as is joyned with true piety.

And in the second I obserue likewise two things.

1. The action, pray, which is a worke of piety.
2. The extention, for us, which is an act of charity.

And so you see that from this short Text, we may learne these foure points.

Videlicet 1. Vnity. 1. Pollicy. 3. Piety. 4. Charity. Brethren, pray for us.

The firſt part.

CHAP. I.

Of the divers ſorts of Brethren, and how this teacheth unity.

FIrſt, Brethren is verbum amoris, a word full of love, but it is diverſly taken in the Scripture; For

1 The compellation containeth two points.
1 The unity of brethren.
Brethren diverſly taken.

First, ſometimes Omnem hominem per fratrem debemus accipere, ſaith S. Auguſtine; we ought to underſtand every man by the name of brother, as he that hateth his brother, that is, he that hateth any man, is a man ſlayer.

1 Way.
Aug. ſer. 61. de tempore.

Secondly, Sometimes it ſignifieth thoſe of the ſame nation, as Moſes went out unto his brethren, and ſaw an Egyptian ſmiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren,

2 Way.
Exod. 2. 11.

Thirdly, Sometimes cognatos Scriptura dicit fratres; the Scriptures calleth our kinred by the name of brethren, as, behold thy brethren ſtand without deſiring to ſpeake with thee.

3 Way.
Aug. l. 1. locus de Gen.
Mat 12 47.
Mat 3 32.

Fourthly, Sometimes it is put for the ſonnes of the ſame parents, as Heva bare againe his brother Abell; and Caine ſaid, Am I my brothers keeper?

4 Way.
Gen. 4. 2, 8, 9.

Fiftly, Sometimes we underſtand thoſe of the ſame religion and profeſſion, as you ſee your calling brethren: Et ſic fratres dicti Chriſtiani; and ſo all Chriſtians are called brethren, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; and ſo Saint Paul meaneth in this place, Brethren, pray for us; for otherwiſe he was an Hebrew, of the ſeed of Iſrael, of the Tribe of Benjamin, and they were Grecians of Theſſalonica, the Metrapolitane City of Macedonia, built by Philip King of Macedon, and ſo called ἀπὸ τῆς Θεσσαλίας νίκης, of his victories obtained in Theſſaly, in which reſpect alſo he called his own daughter Theſſalonica, (as Suidas ſaith) but they were all Chriſtians, and therefore brethren, and therefore the deerer one to another becauſe Chriſtian brethren: Quia major eſt fraternitas ſpiritus quam ſanguinis; becauſe the fraternity or brother-hood of Chriſtians, which is in reſpect of the Spirit that begetteth us with the ſame immortall ſeed, in the wombe of the ſame mother the Church, to bee brought forth and brought up as children to the ſame Father which is in heaven, is a great deale more excellent, then the brotherhood of fleſh and bloud: Nam hæc ſimilitudinem corporis refert, illa cordis unanimitatem demonſtrat, hæc interdum ſibi inimica, illa ſine intermiſſione pacifica eſt; for that ſheweth onely the likeneſſe and ſimilitude of the body, and the ſympathy of naturall diſpoſitions; but this ſheweth the unanimity of the heart, and a concurrent deſire in all holy affections; thoſe are ſometimes contrary unto themſelves, but theſe have alwaies cor unum, & animam unam; one heart, and one minde, to love the ſame things, and to agree in the ſame points: and therefore of all brethren, the love of Chriſtian brethren ſhould excell and exceed all other love of brethren; and theſe of all others ſhould be ready to lay downe their lives for the Brethren.

2 Pet. 1, 10.
Aug. ſer. dom. in mont. fol. 343.
Aug. in apend. de diverſis Ser. 10. in Pſal. 10 10.
1 Iohn 3. 16.

And yet in former times the love of naturall brethren was ſuch, that when a ſouldier which was in the army of Pompey had unawares unto himſelfe, ſlaine his brother that was in the company of Sertorius, and knew the ſame when he beſtript his body, ſeipſum ibi perimens fraterno corpori adjunxit, he ſlew himſelfe for very griefe, and left his owne body upon his brothers carkeiſe: and Saint Auguſtine reports of the ſonnes of Tyndarus, that when Caſtor was ſlaine by Idas, Pollux

How Gentile brethren loved one another.
Val Max. l. 5 & Aug. de civit. l. 5. & Aug. de civit. Dei. l. 2. c. 23. Idem de civit. l. 8. 5.

Pollux besought Iupiter that he might impart halfe his owne life unto his brother,

Sic fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit.

And so we reade of these signes Castor and Pollux, that uterq; alternis diebus lucet; each one of them appeareth every second day; and so the Poet saith of Pylades and Orestes,

Ire jubet Pylades charus periturus Orestem,
Hic negat, inque vicem pugnat uterq; mori.

Extitit hoc unum quod non conveniebat illis cætera par concors, & sine lite fuit.

They never disagreed but onely in this, which of them should first lay downe his life for the other.

And now amongst Christian brethren, we finde Ovids saying to be true,

——Fratrum quoq; gratia rara est

Bern. de advent. Domini ser. 3. p. 8.

They doe shew lesse love among themselves then the heathens did; the love of most is waxen cold, all are become lovers of themselves, and no man remembreth the afflictions of Ioseph: for although (as S. Bernard saith) Iure fraternitatis consilij sumus & auxilij fratribus debitores, consilij quo erudiatur ignorantia, auxilij quo iuvetur infirmitas; in respect of our brotherhood we doe owe unto our brethren both aid and advice, aid to helpe his infirmity, and advice to direct his simplicity: yet alasse, the whole world seeth how we doe insult over the weake, and lay stumbling blockes before the blinde, what wrongs and oppressions in the Common-wealth; what more hostility then among Christian Princes? where now more bloudy warres then among the Christians, that doe imbrew their swords in the bloud of each other, which should rather joyne their strength against the enemies of the Lord? and what bitter contentions doe wee likewise see in the very Church of Christ? Oh, how many bitter lines have ambitious spirits so contentiously scattered in every place, to obscure the cleare light of verity? O poore Church and distressed Spouse of Christ, Pax ab extraneis, pax a paganis, sed filij nequam filij scelerati sæviunt in eam; She hath peace from strangers, peace from pagans, peace from all but her own children; her owne wicked children do raile and rage against her, they struggle in her wombe like Rebeccaes twins, they sharpen their tongues, and blunt their pens in writing either against the other; and so they make the Church of Christ, which should be like the coat of Christ, without a seame, to be torne in pieces, like Ieroboams garment: for as in Israel one halfe followed Tibni, and the other halfe followed Omry; or as in Rome the wiser followed Pompey, the middle sort tooke part with Cæsar, and the rest followed Crassus; or in Athens the people of the mountaines ranne after Pysistratus, those of the valley chose Lycurgus, and those of the Sea-coast Megacles: even so in the Church of God, one is of Paul, another is of Apollo; one is of this minde, and another is of that minde; and as the Poet said of the vulgar sort,

Idem ser. in aula in Pastoa. Synod.

Of the great want of unity among Christian brethren.

Iohn 19. 1. 1 Reg. 11. 30. 1 Reg. 16. 21.

Plut. in vit Crass.

1 Cor. 1. 3, 4.

Scinditur incertum studia in contraria vulgus.

So we may now say of the better sort;

Scinditur incertus studia in contraria clerus.

They are full of all oppositions, each one inventeth some new points, each one dissenteth from the rest, and so by this their dissentions and multiplicity of opinions, they make grievous contentions in every place, and cause many men with the effusion of much blood, to defend those tenents which by the diffusion of a little inke, they have invented in their Cells; for I doe assure my selfe, if there were more charity and unanimity among the Clergy, there would be lesse controversie, and more unity among the Laytie.

But it was enough for Abraham to dissuade from all contention betwixt him and Lot, to say, we be brethren; and I wish that it were enough for us, for we be brethren; and there be enough against us, we need not be against our selves; and therefore, Fugite ut filij lucis sectionem unitatis; we should by all meanes shunne dissentions, because there be many Wolues abroad in sheepes clothing, but if we keepe unity and brotherly love among us, they shall never prevaile against us: but otherwise, ut concordia crescunt minutissima, ita discordia dilabuntur maxima; as in Ignat. ep. 9. ad Philad.

Salust. contura. Catil.

in the time of peace, through unity, the smallest things doe grow happy, so in the time of discord, the greatest things do come to ruine: and therefore we say, that peace and unity are the best of all earthly blessings that God bestoweth on men during their pilgrimage in the state of mortality: and so Brunselsius saith, that a Christians life is nothing else but mutuall charity, or a continuall loving of God and of our neighbours, Quia omnis homo est unus homo; because all men in Christ Iesus should be as one man; like Hypocrates twinnes, which willed and nilled the same things; for the whole Church of Christ is nothing else, but Ecclesia multorum fratrum; an united company of loving brethren: and therfore they should ever owe this duty of love and charity one towards another; for though the Apostle biddeth us to owe nothing unto any man, yet he excepteth this, to love one another, because all Christians being brethren, they must needes owe this mutuall duty of love and charity, Quæ sola etiam reddita semper detinet debitores; which though it be never so much paid, yet it is ever owing unto our brethren, saith Saint Augustine.

Pax optima rerum quæ homini noscitur deum est, pax una triumphis innumeris potior. Sylius Ital. Aug in Psal. 29.

Idem ep. 93. ad Caelestin.

And so you see the love of the Apostle to his brethren; which should teach these brethren to love our Apostle againe, Quia amor amoris magnes, & durus est qui amorem non rependit; because love is a loadstone to draw love againe, and he is unworthy of love that requiteth not his lover with the same measure of love as he receiveth; for he should love much, to whom much is forgiven, saith our Saviour; and τὸ σφόδρα φιλεῖσθαι βούλεσθαι, ἀπὸ τοῦ σφόδρα φιλεῖν πήγεται, he that desires much love, saith Isidor. Pelus. must shew much love: and therefore as the people doe require love from the Ministers, so the Ministers should receive love from the people; for we give them panem sanctuarij, the spirituall bread of life: and therefore we should have from them, panem promptuarij, bread enough to sustaine our life.

Isidor. Pelus. l. 2. ep. 148.

But alas, such is our case, they are ready enough to demand what is due to them, but they are backward enough to pay what they owe to us; for whereas true love is shewed foure manner of waies.

Love is shewed foure waies.

First, In words, when we speake friendly unto our neighbours, and beseech them to be reconciled unto God.

1 Way. 2 Cor. 5. 20.

Secondly, In workes, Quia probatio dilectionis exhibitio est operis; when by our outward workes, we testifie our inward affection unto our brethren.

2 Way. Greg. hom. 30 in Evang. Mat. 20. 28.

Thirdly, by our service one to another, when we desire not so much to be ministred unto, as to minister, as our Saviour saith.

3 Way.

Fourthly, In being ready to lay downe our lives for the brethren, which is the greatest signe of love, and the highest degree of affection; for greater love then this hath no man, that a man should lay downe his life for his friend: and therefore our Saviour Christ tooke upon him, non solum formam servi ut subesset, sed quasi mali servi ut vapularet; not onely the forme of a servant, that he might minister, but also was contented to be accounted as an evill servant, that he might suffer for us; and all this to shew his love unto us every manner of way:

4 Way.

Iohn 15. 13.

Bernard ser. quart. hebd. pœnit.

Whereas I say, love is thus shewed, let us say, and doe, and die for our people, as we daily doe, weare and consume our selves like John Baptist, that was a burning and a shining light; like the candle that consumeth it selfe in giving light to others; yet are we sure to have love little enough from them, good words is almost all we have, and alwaies we have not that from all; for our soules are filled with the scornefull reproofe of the wealthy, and with the despightfullnesse of the proud: but this much shall serve touching the Apostles affection, and that unity which should be amongst us all; because we are brethren.

The

Part. 2.

The second part.

CHAP. II.

Of the Apostles wisedome and godly pollicy in seeking for to winne the Thessalonians to performe this duty: and of three sorts of Preachers, whereof two sorts are defective in this point.

2 The pollicie and discretion of the Apostle. That a gentle loving intreate, is the best way to perswade men to doe any thing. 2 Cor. 12. 16.

SEcondly, Saint Paul herein sheweth his discretion, by this manner of speech that he useth unto them; he tels the Corinthians, that he caught them with a guile, not to beguile them, but to save them; and so here and in all places, he useth all his wit, all his pollicy, and all the wisedome that he hath to win men unto Christ; and being won, to make them to serve Christ; for being desirous of their Prayers, he comes unto them, in spiritu mansuetudinis; in the spirit of meekenesse, he creepes into their hearts with termes of love, and seeks to lead them, tanquam oves, leni spiritu, non dura meant; rather as sheepe by an inward sweet influence, then as goats to be driven by an outward extreame violence; so God himselfe dealt with our Forefathers, and all their posterity; hee heaped upon them, beneficia nimia copiosa, multa & magna, privata & positiva, wonderous great benefits and blessings, to see if he could so draw them unto himselfe in the chaines of love, and to allure them by all faire meanes, and all the allectives under heaven, unto his blessed service; he spake them faire, he used them kindly, hee promised them much, he gave them more, and all to perswade them to their owne happinesse; So Christ the Sonne of God alleadgeth this for a reason, why all men should be willing to come unto him, because he is meeke and lowly in heart; and Moses the man of God, was mitissimus super terram, the meekest and the mildest man that was upon the face of the earth, and so the fittest man to guide the people of God; and Titus Vespasian for his curtesie and affability was called, delicia generis humani, the delight of mankinde; he was so curteous unto all, that he was wont to say, Non oportet quemquam a Cæsaris colloquio tristem discedere; it was not fit for any man to depart sad from Cæsar, for he knew this was the way to winne them; Mollis responsio frangit iram, a soft answer appeaseth wrath, and a gentle intreaty will soone perswade men:

Hos. 11. 4.

Mat. 11. 29.

Num. 12. 3.

Horatius de arte poetica.

Silvestres homines sacer interpresq; Deorum,
Cædibus, & victu fœdo deterruit Orpheus:
Dictus ab hoc, lenire Tygres rapidosq; Leones.

Dictus & Amphiõ Thebanæ conditor urbis,
Saxa movere sono testudinis, & prece blandâ,
Ducere quo vellet. 1 Cor. 2. 4.

The faire spoken Orpheus and Amphion by their sweet perswasions are said to have mollified the most savage natures, and to have brought unto civility the rudest and the wildest men; and therefore Saint Paul here doth so lovingly intreat them, and so friendly beseech them with this sweetest name of Brethren, to pray for them; Brethren, pray for us.

To teach us, that as we be Pascendo Pastores, the Teachers of our people, so wee should bee diligendo Patres, as well Fathers for affection, as teachers for instruction; and that we should intreat & beseech our people, in the bowels of Christ Iesus, when we might command them in the Name of the great Iehova; for it is most certaine, that when bitter reprehensions doth harden men in iniquity, a gentle intreaty will often winne them unto piety; for it was but the alluring speech

ſpeech of Apollo, that made many to affect him rather then Saint Paul: and it is dayly ſeene, that a golden mouthed Chryſoſtome, with his ſweet perſwaſions, will winne more men to Chriſt then any one can doe with his bitter reprehenſions; becauſe as Seneca ſaith in another caſe, qui vult amari languida regnet manu; inviſa nunquam imperia retinuit diu; he that would be loved in his raigne, let him rule with a gentle hand; ſo he that would be loved of his flocke, muſt feede them with the words of love.

Seneca in Thebaid' act. 4.
Peragit tranquilla tempeſtas quod violenta nequit. Obſequium ingreſſu, domas immiſos, leones.

And yet for all this I denie not, but as Saint Bernard ſaith, qui non vult duci, debet trahi; he that will not be perſwaded ſhould be compelled; for if men will not turne, God will whet his glittering ſword, and his hand ſhall take hold of vengeance: and therefore we reade, that in the Arke of Moſes, there was Aarons Rod for correction, as well as Manna for refection: and in the Church of Chriſt, there is diſcipline for the ſtubborne, as well as doctrine for the ſimple; and from the Seate of God, there proceeded lightnings and thunders, as well as the ſound of harpers harping with their Harpes.

The Judgements of God muſt be threatned, when his mercies cannot allure us to ſerve him. Rev. 14.

To teach us, that (as Saint Hierome ſaith) debet amor læſus iraſci; love too much provoked will waxe angry: and therefore whoſoever deſpiſeth the riches of Gods goodneſſe, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, he treaſureth up unto himſelfe wrath againſt the day of wrath; for this is juſt with God, (ſaith the Apoſtle) to render unto every man according to his deeds: and therefore, we muſt aſwell thunder out Gods judgements againſt irrepentant ſinners, as to diſtill Gods mercies to the tender-hearted Chriſtians; we muſt aſwell cry, woe to the ſinnefull nation, to the people laden with iniquity, as promiſe eaſe unto them, that are wearied under the waight of their ſinnes.

Rom. 2. 4, 6.

Eſay 1. 4.

Mat. 11.

And yet ſtill herein, in our greateſt indignation againſt ſinne, we muſt not forget Saint Bernards rule, dum das verbera oſtende ubera; to doe as loving nurces, while they ſhake the rod, to ſhew the dugge, or as the good Samaritan, to powre wine and oyle into the wounds of the diſtreſſed traveller; that is, ſo to mixe the bitter threatnings of the Law, with the ſweete promiſes of the Goſpell, as that we neither drive them to deſpaire by the one, nor yet make them preſumptuous by the other: and therefore herein we neede diſcretion, which is one of the two eſſentiall parts of a true Preacher, who is that wiſe and faithfull ſteward.

Luke 10. 34.

How needfull a thing is diſcretion for the Preachers of Gods Word. Mat. 24. 24.

First, he muſt be faithfull to doe his dutie; And,

Secondly, he muſt be wiſe and diſcreete, to know how to doe it; to give unto every owne his owne portion, and that in due ſeaſon; to preach mercy, to whom mercy, and vengeance, to whom vengeance belongeth; to know before whom we ſpeake, and what we ſpeake; to doe bonum bene, and to waigh our words in the ballance of diſcretion, before we utter them unto our Auditors, and ſurely in my judgement, it is a true ſaying, that an ounce of diſcretion is worth a pound of learning; becauſe learning puffeth up, ſaith the Apoſtle; and it is but as Achilles ſword in the hand of him that knoweth not how to uſe it.

Poſtulat ut capiat, quæ non intelligit arma;

Iſider de ſummo bono.

But diſcretion is the keeper and guider of all vertues; Diſcretion guideth, Learning teacheth, and Charity edifieth; and thus theſe three graces march in order, that muſt lead, and theſe muſt follow; and therefore, whatſoever is done without this, is ill done; quia virtus indiſcreta pro vitio reputatur; becauſe zeale it ſelfe, Charity it ſelfe, and Vertue it ſelfe, being undiſcreet is no better then a diſcreete vice, nor yet many times ſo good; for that it groweth often unto many vices, and produceth many inconveniences, as moſt woefull experience dayly ſheweth; for, I find two ſorts of men tainted with this fault.

That there be three ſorts of Preachers. Firſt, diſcreet and godly Preachers.

First, the too popular Preachers, when they come to preach before their governours.

Secondly, the paraſites of Princes, when they come to preach before the people, for I divide the whole claſſie of Preachers into theſe three ranks.

The First are thoſe that are diſcreet and faithfull Preachers, either before

Prince or people, εὐπροσηγόροι, ſuch as would willingly diſcharge their duties towards all men, and hold the middle way, inter adulationem et litigium; betwixt pleaſing and provoking.

Secondly, paraſites of Princes and great men. Aug in Pſal.9.

The Second are thoſe that uſe too much flattery before Princes, and too much harſhneſſe before the people; and theſe neither way can doe good; for commonly the people will not be compelled, and flattery not onely blindes the eyes, that they cannot ſee, but alſo perſwadeth the doer to delight in ſinne; delectat enim facere, in quibus non ſolum non metuitur reprehenſor, ſed etiam laudatur operator; for a man delighteth to doe thoſe things for which he is not onely free from reprehenſion, but alſo ſure of commendation; and therefore, bene cum principibus ageretur, ſi ſcirent inter adulationem & laudem diſtinguere; it were well for Princes and great men, if they could tell how to diſtinguiſh and to diſcerne true deſart from baſe flatterie, and that blinde ambition, and deſire of praiſe, ſhould not make them to ſwallow both without diſtinction, and to give credence unto others rather then unto themſelues.

Thirdly, the too popular Preachers

The Third are thoſe that are too popular, the paraſites and pleaſers of the people, yet ſomewhat too bold to ſpeake againſt authority, and theſe are too blame in many things; for, as inſtabile vulgus, the headleſſe and heedleſſe multitude are unable to conceive, and unwilling to be taught, unworthy to rule, and unpatient to bee ruled; ſo the pleaſures of theſe men muſt needs diſpleaſe all wiſe men, To what the vulgar people are naturally inclined.

οἱ ἔν γνώσει ὄντες, ὅτε τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀρέσκουσιν; ὅτε σωφροσύνη πολλοί; For wiſe men pleaſe not the people, neither can the people pleaſe wiſe men; for you ſhall ever ſee the multitude alwaies deſirous of theſe two things.

1 Thing.

* Let us breake the bonds.

Firſt, To draw their heads out of the collar of government, and to bring all rule into their owne hands, diſrumpamus vincula, * is their ſong; no terme pleaſeth them better then free eſtate, no man to pleaſe them, but of their owne election, no longer rule, but while he pleaſe them. O miſerable ſtate to ſerve ſuch people!

2 Thing.

Secondly, If this they cannot doe, then muſt they have a hand in every point of ſtate, yea even in thoſe of greateſt waight, nothing is good, that they doe not, nothing to be done, that they allow not, they have an intereſt (they ſay) in all, and therefore they muſt have a hand in all; and ſo in very deed thoſe that never learned to obey, would guide and governe their chiefeſt Governors.

Popular Preachers blamed.

And therefore I ſay that thoſe Preachers, whoſe riſing hath beene by the people, and who give themſelues to popular applauſe are either halting in their honeſty, or defective in their diſcretion; and ſo moſt unfit, either to teach the wiſe, or to governe the fooliſh; for in the firſt, they teach factious and dangerous poſitions; and in the ſecond, they muſt either yeeld to popular deſires, or diſſent from themſelues, and ſo leeſe the applauſe of the people, which is one of the maineſt things they hoped for and gaped after.

And ſo experience daily ſheweth us, that either want of honeſtie to doe what they know, or elſe want of wiſedome and diſcretion to know what to doe, hath moved the blinde and wilde zeale of many factious men, ſo frivouſly to intermeddle with extravagant and needleſſe diſcourſes, both of State and Commonwealth, and ſo furiouſly to precipitate themſelues to moſt dangerous contention in the Church of God, and many times being hoyſted up to the ſterne of dignity, to make way for the vulgar, to ſpurne againſt authority: And therefore as I would wiſh no more wealth of God, then I had grace to uſe it; ſo would I wiſh no more learning, nor any other grace, then I had diſcretion to guide them; for this is that ſalt, whereof our Saviour ſpeaketh; have ſalt in your ſelues: and therefore all learning and all knowledge without this, will ſoone putrifie, and prove fit for nothing, but to be caſt into the dung-hill; as our Saviour ſaith; And ſo much for my two obſervations out of the word Brethren, now followeth the requeſt, or the exhortation, Pray for us.

PART.

The third part.

3 Part.

Chap. I.

Of the divers kindes of Prayers, both in respect of the matter and forme.

SEcondly, In the request or exhortation, I noted two things,

2 The request containeth two things

{1. The action, Pray.
{2. The extention, for us.

First, for the action, that is, Pray, lest I should wander, or ride at randome in this wide Ocean of matter, I will divide all that I meane to speake of this point, into these five heads,

1 The action.

{1. Of the divers kindes of Prayer.
{2. Of the party to whom we should Pray.
{3. Of the place where we are to Pray.
{4. Of the time when we must Pray.
{5. Of the manner how we ought to Pray.

Five things considered concerning Prayer.

First, for the divers kindes of Prayer, we must know that Prayer is distinguished two wayes:

that is, {1. In respect of the matter. {2: In respect of the forme. } for

First, in respect of the matter, prayer is said to be foure-fold,

1 Prayer in respect of the matter foure-fold, 1 Tim. 2. 1.

{1. Supplications. } {3. Intercession. }
{2. Prayers. } {4. Giving of thankes. }

First, Supplications are for the removall of evils: Secondly, Prayers for the obtaining of good: Thirdly, intercession in the behalfe of others: And fourthly thankesgiving for the good received: But we may more briefly say that praier is either,

Danæus tract de orat. dom p. 47.

That there are two kinds of prayer.

{1. αἴτησις, } An invocation or petition.
{2. εὐχαριστία. } A gratulation or thankesgiving.

First, Invocation or petition is either {1. To remove evill. {2. To obtaine good. }

First, Invocation.

First, evill is said to be either of sinne, or of punishment; and we should pray against both: first, Saint Paul, buffetted of the messenger of Satan, prayed: to teach us, that when we are inticed to sinne, we should pray, that God would not leade us into temptation. Secondly, the evill of punishment, is either temporall, spirituall, or eternall. First, all afflictions, judgements, plagues, warres, and all other miseries whatsoever, they are punishments for sinne: and therefore wee should pray that God would either take them away from us, or sanctifie them unto us; that they might worke together for the best. Secondly, spirituall punishment is when for our former sinnes we are delivered up to a reprobate sense, to doe those things that are not convenient: and therefore wee should most heartily pray that God would forgive us our former sinnes, and not punish the same with this spirituall fearefull punishment. Thirdly, the eternall punishment is that everlasting death which is prepared for the Devill and his Angels, from which wee should continually pray to be delivered.

1 To remove evil.

2 To obtain good. Secondly, The good that we should pray for, is every where comprehended under these two names, {1. Grace. 2. Peace.} that is,

All good comprehended under Grace and Peace.

{1. Grace, whereby we may truly serve our God, and 2. Peace, whereby we may quietly live among men.}

And these two Saint Paul doth alwaies joyne together, to shew (it may be) that hee deserves no grace, which desires no peace; for howsoever disordered spirits say,

Non pacem petimus superi, date gentibus iras,
Nunc urbes excite feras, conjuret in arma Mundus.

We seeke not peace, we long for warres; yet all well-affected Christians that doe loathe to bathe their swords and to make them drunke with the blood of men, will say with Drances,

Nulla salus bello, pacem nos poscimus omnes.

Lucan. l. 10. No good can come from warres; because as Lucan saith, Nulla fides pietasque viris qui castra sequuntur;

There is neither piety nor fidelity among the rabble rout of them that follow the Campe for love of spoyles, but as Saint Augustine saith, Nocendi cupiditas, ulciscendi crudelitas, implacatus & implacabilis animus, feritas rebellandi, libido Dominandi & similia sunt in arma sequentibus; violence, cruelties, rapes, prophaneness and all lewdnesse are commonly to be found among them: and therefore all Christians will pray for the peace of Ierusalem, they shall prosper that love it; because, as the Poet saith,

Aug. cont. Faust. l. 22. c. 74. Omnia pace vigent, & pacis tempore florent;

All things doe flourish in the time of peace, and all men may live without feare, and the more earnestly pray for grace.

But now me thinkes, I heare men crying for peace in Christ, and warres with men; a sweet distinction, to love God and hate thy neighbour; the devill laughes at this, to see thee such a subtil Sophister, that, when we pray, give peace in our time, O Lord, and at every meale we eate, we say, God send us peace through Iesus Christ our Lord, thou canst presently distinguish that this is meant with God, but not with men; for thou canst be at peace with God, when thou makest thy sword drunke with the blood of men; and thou canst then praise thy God best, when thou inrichest thy selfe with the spoyles of the slaughtered; for is not our life a warfare, and are we not all souldiers, to fight against the enemies of Iesus Christ? Yea, doth not Christ himselfe say, He came not to send peace, but the sword, and to set the father against the sonne, and the daughter against the mother? Alas beloved, it is true, that we are all souldiers, and must make continuall warre with Satan, sinne, and sinfull men; but the weapons of our warfare are spirituall and not carnall, saith the Apostle: I will pray yet against their wickednesse saith the Psalmist; and when they curse, I will blesse them, as the Apostle teacheth me, and so I shall kindle the coales of fire upon their head: and if this will not overcome them, I will suffer unto death, and in my patience I will possesse my soule, as my Saviour adviseth me; for I see not how faith can be wrought with the sword, or heresies consumed with faggots: Indeed when the Samaritanes would not receive Christ into their village, his Disciples would faine command fire to come downe from Heaven and to consume them; but our Saviour told them, They knew not of what spirit they were of; for they might have knowne, that he could suddenly turne all the world into hell, and consume all his enemies in a moment; but he useth his patience and long-sufferance to lead sinners to repentance, and he suffereth heresies and wicked men to bee amongst us, that they which bee approved may bee made manifest: and Iob 7. 1. 1 Tim. 1. 18. Matth. 10. 34. Rom. 12. 20. Luke 21. 19. Luke 9. 55. 1 Cor. 11. 19.

therefore

therefore I say, that all true Christians that desire grace, will most faithfully pray for peace; and not onely with God, but also with all men; because the onely signe of loving God is to be in love and charity with all men.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum

And yet I say not this with the Anabaptists, to condemne lawfull warres; for though health is ever to be prayed for, as in it selfe simply good; yet Physicke oftentimes is good and necessary to recover and to preserve our health, and so to prevent many ill diseases that otherwise would soone invade our bodies; and so may warres be just and lawfull, yea many times most needfull, when the causes thereof doe appeare just and urgent; but I say this to commend a blessed peace, to dissuade all men from loathing Manna, from growing weary of their owne happinesse, and to shew how happy are those nations si sua norint agricolæ, which have a King of peace, Qui facit eos in gentem vnam, which laboureth for peace amongst all nations.

Caietan in Mat. 6.33.

And under these two things, grace and peace, are comprehended all kindes of blessings, both spirituall and temporall; for though some men doe make a question, whether we ought to pray, or seeke for temporall things; because our Saviour saith, that if we seeke for Gods kingdome, Τάυτα πάντα προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν; all these things shall be cast unto you; yet Saint Augustine saith, that cum dicit primum, when he saith, seeke first the Kingdome of God, he meaneth that these things in the second place are to be sought and prayed for; illud tanquam bonum nostrum, hæc tanquam necessaria nostra; the Kingdome of God as our onely good, and these things as needfull and necessary for us: and our Saviour sheweth as much, when he teacheth us to pray, give us this day our daily bread: but we must take heede, that we be not too remisse in seeking after spirituall gifts, and too eager in the pursuite of these temporall goods; for we came naked into the world, and we shall returne naked out of the same againe: and therefore, if we have foode and rayment, we should be therewith contented.

Mat. 6.33.

Aug. l. 1. de ser. Domini.

Haud ullas portabu opes, nec re-vo-tu ad undas, Nudas ad inferos labere, aquæ. Martial. l. 5.

It is observed by Roffensis, that in the Manna of the Israelites there were twelve severall wonders.

Roffens. l. c. 12.

Twelve severall wonders in the Manna.

First, the children of Israel were fed with it forty yeeres.

1 Wonder.

Secondly, to the godly it tasted according to every mans desire.

2 Wonder.

Thirdly, to the ungodly, it was loathsome.

3 Wonder.

Fourthly, a gomer of it sufficed all stomackes.

4 Wonder.

Fiftly, whether men gathered more or lesse, they had full measure, that is, a gomer full.

5 Wonder.

Sixtly, they had two gomers full the day before the Sabbath, and on other dayes they had but one gomer full.

6 Wonder.

Seventhly, It fell every day, excepting the Sabbath day.

Eightly, It melted in the sunne, and was hardened in the fire.

7 Wonder.

Ninthly, It was kept many yeeres in the Arke unputrified.

8 Wonder.

Tenthly, being preserved but till the morrow, it putrified, except on the Sabbath day.

9 Wonder.

10 Wonder.

Eleventhly, he that gathered least had his gomer full.

11 Wonder.

Twelfthly, he that gathered most, had but his gomer full.

12 Wonder.

Out of all which observations, though I might note many excellent things, worth your meditation; yet for this purpose, I desire you to consider but these two points.

Two things most observable.

1 Observat.

First, he that gathered least had enough, and he that gathered most had but enough.

Secondly, he that gathered no more then was sufficient, pleased God, and he that was covetous in gathering more then would suffice him for that day, the Manna putrified before the next morning, and God was highly displeased with him; To teach us.

2 Observat. Deut. 17. 16. 17.

1 Lesson. God careth to provide sufficient for every man.

First, that God which created all men, will give unto every man, so much as he seeth sufficient for him, during his pilgrimage in the wildernesse of this world; and the greatest men, the richest men, shall have (doe what they can) but sufficient, but foode and rayment, during their life; for they shall carry nothing with them.

2 Lesson.

Secondly, that if we be contented with what hee seeth sufficient for us, we shall doe that which is acceptable in his sight; but if we grudge, through discontent, and labour by unlawfull meanes to gather any forbidden fruit, and to inrich our selves with the treasures of this world, we shall finde that our riches will bee soone cankered, and our garments will bee moth-eaten, and the wrath of God will be kindled against us to consume us from off the earth.

Iames 5.1.

That we should take heede of covetousnesse.

And therefore, though it bee not onely lawfull, but also necessary that wee should pray for temporall things; yet let us take heede & beware of covetousnes; and desire of God, but as our Savior taught us, to give us this day our daily bread, that is, meerely so much, as he seeth convenient for us, food and rayment, in that manner as he seeth good, and not as we would desire, during the whole terme of our frayle and miserable life. And in very deed, how soever our nature is ever ambitious of great matters; yet the meane estate is the safest state for every man; not onely because,

Horat. carm. l. 2. od 10.

Sæpius ventis agitatur ingens
Pinus, & celsæ graviore casu
Decidunt turres, feriuntque summos
fulmina montes,

To stormie tempests subjects are the Pine and Cedar tall,
The turrets high, as mountaines by, are subject to a fall;

1. Tim 6.9.

But especially because (as the Apostle saith) they that will be rich, doe fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many hurtfull and foolish lustes that drowne men in destruction and perdition.

Secondly, Thanksgiving.

Secondly, gratulation or thanksgiving is the other kinde, and the chiefest kinde of prayer.

The chiefest kind of prayer.

1 Reason.

2 Reason.

First, because to make request concernes our selves, and sheweth our love to our selves; but to render thankes sheweth our love to God.

Secondly, because the other is a taking, this is a giving; and our Saviour saith, it is a more blessed thing to give then to receive.

3 Reason.

Revel 7.12. Act 29 35.

Thirdly, because to make request shall cease, when wee come to the place where there is no want; but the Saints in heaven doe ascribe glory, and wisedome, and thankes, and honour, and power, and might unto our God for evermore.

4 Reason. Esay 6.3. Luke 20.

Fourthly, because the Angels that feele no want doe alwayes praise the Lord; saying, Holy holy, holy, Lord God of hostes, the earth is full of thy glory; and therefore we that shall be ἰσάγγελοι, like unto the Angels of God, should not alwayes speake with the tongues of men, to begge, but sometimes with the tongues of Angels, to praise the Lord for his goodnesse: for this is the onely thing that God requireth, or that we can render unto God for all the blessings that he hath bestowed upon us.

Antonin. l. 2. § 5. 6. 12 § 1.

Three speciall reasons to perswade men to be thankefull.

1 Reason.

And there be three speciall reasons (saith Antoninus) that should move us unto this duty of thankefulnesse.

Psal 113 1.

1. Thess. 5.

First, the practise of all the Saints, Moses and all Israel after their passage through the red Sea, Ioshua after his victory, David after his deliverance out of the hands of Saul, he composed songs of thankefulnesse unto God; and the manifold precepts of holy Scripture that doe command the same; for David biddeth all the servants of the Lord to praise the Name of the Lord; and he saith, that it becommeth well the just to be thankefull; and the Apostle biddeth us, in all things to give thankes unto God.

2 Reason.

A three-fold voice of every creature.

Secondly, the consideration of all creatures, which doe all of them teach men to be thankefull; because every creature (saith Saint Augustine) Est quoddam beneficium homini collatum; is a gift bestowed on man, for which man oweth thankes unto God: and therefore Hugo de S. vict. saith, that every creature speakes these three words to every man; accipe, redde, fuge; take, restore, flee; flee; The first is vox famulantis, the voice of a servant bidding us to receive the gifts of God; the second is vox admonentis, the voice of a teacher, bidding us to render thankes unto God; the third is comminantis, the voice of a threatner, bidding us flee the vengeance of God if wee bee not thankefull unto God for these blessings. And so many creatures by their owne examples doe teach man to be thankefull; for the very dogge, saith Saint Ambrose, is so thankefull for a piece of bread, ut pro Dom no mori velit, that he will die for his Master; and Geminian tels us of a Leopard that was so thankefull unto one that delivered her whelpes out of a ditch, that she accompanied him through the forrest, and delivered him from the danger of all other savage beasts; and C. Agrippa saith, that a Serpent called Aspis, used to eat at a mans table, seeing a dog killing his childe, did, to shew her thankfulnes unto the man, kill the dog immediately after: What should I say more? but as Solomon saith, vade ad formicam, & disce sapientiam, goe to any creature, and he will teach thee to be thankefull to thy Creator.

1 Voice.
2 Voice. Hugo de S. vict. l. 2 c. 3. de Area.
3 Voice.
The creatures teach us thankefulnesse.
Geminianus de exempl. l. 5 c. 36.
C. Agrippa de vanit. scient. c. 62.

Thirdly, the manifold gifts and graces that we have recived, that is, the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men, doth teach all men, not to receive the grace of God in vaine, but to be truly thankefull unto God for the same.

3 Reason.

And as these three reasons should perswade thee to be thankefull, so there be three other reasons (saith Antoninus) which should dispell from us all ingratitude.

Antom p. 2. t. 3. c. 9 § 2.

Three things that should driue away ingratitude from us.

First, because as Saint Augustine and Saint Bernard say, Quod dederat Deus gratis abstulit ingratis; God will in justice take away from the ungratefull, what he hath freely bestowed upon them: for so our Saviour sheweth in the parable of the vineyard, which he would take away from the ungratefull husband-men, and give it unto them that would yeeld him fruits in due season.

1 Thing.
2 Thing.
Ioseph. ant.

Secondly, because ingratitude doth not onely abstract from us that good which we received, but doth also inflict upon us the evils that we feared; for Iosephus saith, that Hezekiah sickened unto death, because he did not shew himselfe sufficiently thankefull for his wonderfull deliverance out of the hands of Sennacherib; and the Apostle saith of the Gentiles, that because when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankefull, therefore God gave them over to vile affections.

Rom 1.

Thirdly, because ingratitude for blessings received, detaineth and keepeth from us those blessings that are promised; Nam ille non dignus est dandis, qui ingratus est de datis; for he is unworthy of more, that gave no thankes for what hee had; whereupon Saint Bernard saith, that ingratitude is a winde that drieth up the fountaine of Gods grace; and Antoninus saith, that by the civill Law, the father may deprive his sonne of his inheritance, if his sonne prove unthankefull unto him, which otherwise he cannot doe; and so our heavenly Father may justly deprive us of the kingdome of heaven, if we be unthankefull unto him for his blessings: And therefore when wee pray to God and make request for what we neede, let us not forget to be truely thankefull for what wee have: but let us remember that there bee three degrees of thankefulnesse; the first is recognoscere, to acknowledge his goodnesse with our hearts; the second is laudare, to praise him for his goodnesse with our mouthes; and the third is retribuere, to expresse the same in our lives and conversations; Non si maledicitur Deus & negatur malis factis, tum bonis benedicitur & confitetur; for if we deny God and curse him by our evill deedes, then certainely we doe praise him and blesse him by our good and godly deedes, saith Saint Augustine.

3 Thing.
Ingratitude what mischiefe it doth.

Three degrees of thankefulnesse.

1
2
3

Secondly, prayer in respect of the forme is said to be fourefold. As,

2 Prayer in respect of the forme is manifold.

First mentall, so Moses Exod. 14. 15. and Anna 1. Sam. 1. 13. prayed unto God when they said never a word; and thus an afflicted soule may pray to God in the midst of company, and when no man heareth him, God which knoweth his heart, doth heare his prayer.

First. Mentall.

Secondly, Vocall, as Salomon prayed, 1. Kings 8. 23. because words are to be added when we may and can use the same.

Secondly, Vocall.

Thirdly, sudden.

Thirdly, Sudden prayers, which we cal ejaculations, or a lifting up of our hearts and minds unto God upon any ſudden occaſion that preſenteth it ſelfe unto us.

Fourthly, compoſed.

Fourthly, Compoſed prayers, and made with our beſt wiſedomes; ſo Daniel prayed, and ſo all men ſhould doe, if they conſidered into whoſe preſence they goe to ſpeake; for if wee muſe what to ſay before a mighty man, why ſhould we not premeditate what to ſay before we come to God? and therefore the wiſe Salomon ſaith, be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be too haſty to utter any thing before God.

Eccleſ. 5. 2.

Fiftly, Conceived.

Fiftly, Conceived prayers, that is, upon all new occaſions to frame new formes of words to expreſſe our mindes, as the occaſion requireth.

Sixtly, Preſcribed.

Sixtly, Preſcribed prayers, that is, prayers made by others for to helpe them that are not ſo well able to compoſe prayers themſelves: thus the 136. Pſalme, that was made by David, was ſung after Davids time, as wee may ſee in 2. Chron. 20. 23. 29. 30.

Seventhly, Private.

Seventhly, Private prayers, when a houſhold onely prayes together, and ſo a Chriſtians houſe is made Gods Church, and bringeth a bleſſing upon the whole houſe, as the preſence of Gods Arke did upon the houſe of Obed-Edom; or elſe when one man prayeth alone, according as our Saviour biddeth, when thou prayeſt, that is, when thou meaneſt to pray privately, enter into thy cloſet, and ſhut the doore, and thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret will reward thee openly. And thus every man ſhould often pray, becauſe thus alone we may powre out the very ſecrets of our ſoules before God, which we are loth to doe before the Congregation, and becauſe this is the trueſt triall of a man, whether he feareth God or not; becauſe hypocrites will doe it to be ſeene of men, but the true Chriſtian doth it to be heard of God alone.

Rom. 16. 5. Philemon 2. 2. Sam. 6. 12.

Ob. But you will ſay, that you can have no convenient time nor place thus privately to pray unto God.

Sol. I anſwere, that thou canſt never miſſe time and place to ſinne, and that privately and ſecretly too; thy ſinnes doe witneſſe this: and therefore why canſt thou not aſwell finde time and place to pray?

Eighthly, Publike.

Eighthly, Publicke prayers, when we joyne our ſelves with the aſſemblies of Gods people; thus the Corinthians had one place to worſhip in; and thus we ought all of us to do; becauſe this publike prayer doth moſt honor God, whē we ſhew unto the world that we are not aſhamed to profeſſe his Name & it is more powerfull to obtaine for our ſelves, quia impoſſible eſt multorum preces non exaudiri; & therefore the Prophet biddeth us, to gather the people together to pray to God; and ſo the King of Nineve did when Ionas threatned the deſtruction of his people.

1. Cor. 11 20. Ioel 2. 16. Ion. 3. 8.

And beſides, this publike praying is a ſigne of vnity, and a moſt effectuall meanes to ſtirre up one another to ſerve the Lord.

Ninthly, Ordinary.

Ninthly, Ordinary prayers, when we obſerve our accuſtomed times and manner of praying; for there is no man that hath any care to ſerve his God, or ſave his owne ſoule, but as for all other things, ſo ſpecially for this duty of prayer he hath ſet and appointed times, as, ſome morning and evening, ſome at noone-day, and ſo forth, to make his prayers and ſupplications unto Almighty God.

Tenthly, extraordinary.

Tenthly, Extraordinary prayers, both in reſpect of time and manner, as when any extraordinary occaſion ſhall move us thereunto; as either when God beſtoweth upon us an extraordinary bleſſing, or threatneth ſome grievous puniſhment, or when we would obtaine ſome ſpeciall favour, or expreſſe ſome ſpeciall ſorrow for ſome ſpeciall ſinnes that we have committed; then ought we more eſpecially to pray or to praiſe the Lord; ſo the King of Nineve did when hee heard the preaching of Ionas; ſo David after his fall, ſaith, I have roared for the very diſquietnes of my heart, and my ſighing is not hid from thee; ſo Peter when he denied his Maſter, went out and wept bitterly; ſo Chriſt a little before his paſſion did more earneſtly pray then ever he did before, with loud cries and teares, ſaith the Apoſtle; and ſo the Saints doe often pray with ſighes that cannot be expreſſed. And ſo you ſee how prayer is diverſly diſtinguiſhed, both in reſpect of the matter and forme of praying.

Ion. 3. 8. Pſal. 38. 8. Vide Pſal. 32. 26. Rom. 8

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of the party to whom we should pray, and of the place where we ought to pray.

SEcondly, For the party to whom we should pray, God himselfe sheweth unto us, when he saith, Call upon me in the day of thy trouble, and I will heare thee, so shalt thou praise me: so doth Christ himselfe, when he teacheth us to say, Our Father which art in Heaven; and so doth the Holy Ghost, when hee moveth our hearts to cry Abba, Father:

2 To whom we ought to pray.

Psal 50 15.

And there bee three unanswerable reasons, why we should onely pray to God, As

Why we should pray to God.

First, because he onely knowes the secrets of our hearts.

1 Reason. Ier 17 10.

Secondly, because hee onely is omniscient, that is, such a one as knoweth all things.

2 Reason. Ier 23 23.

Thirdly, because he onely is omnipotent, which can onely helpe us.

3 Reason. Luke 1.37.

And therefore concerning the blessed Virgin, we honour her name, wee reverence her memoriall, and with all generation, we call her blessed; and of the blessed Saints we say, that their remembrance is like the composition of the perfume that is made by the art of the Apothecary; It is sweete as hony in all mouthes, and as Musicke at a banquet of wine; but to pray to any of them, we have neither precept from God, nor practise in the ancient Church, nor promise in Gods Word to be heard; and themselves neither doe desire it, nor can deserve it: and therefore to seeke to God, by the helpe of them, as to the King by his Favourite, we leave it to be used in Kings Courts, and not in Gods Church, as Saint Ambrose speaketh; and we will onely pray to him, in whom we onely beleeve, that is, to the onely God, who doth at all times heare us, and can at any time helpe us; and if any other dare offer prayers unto any, Nisi soli domino Deo; But onely to the Lord God, as Origen speaketh; wee doe with the Councell of Laodicea anathamatize all such, for praying unto the creatures, and relinquishing their Creator, which is blessed for evermore.

That we should pray to none but God. Eccius.49.1.

Ambros. in Rom. c 1.v.22.

Origen. l 5. contra Celsum, Con. Laod. Can.35.

Thirdly, touching the place where wee are to pray, I say, the precept of Christ, the practise of Christians, and our manifold necessities teach us to pray in every place, with Moses upon the mountaine, with Elias under a Iuniper tree, with Cornelius in our Chambers, with David in our beds, with Daniel in the Lions den, and with all Christians in all places: yet for publicke prayer, the chiefest service of Almighty God,

3 Where we should pray. That we should pray every where. Matth.6. Act.10.30.

I say the Church is the fittest place, and the onely place appointed by GOD and man; for this is doctrinæ sedes, & domus sancta, (saith Saint Chrysostome) the schoole of Divinitie, the seate of Doctrine, an holy house, a house of God, and the gate of Heaven; it is domus orationis; the house of prayer, saith our Saviour; here were the Arke of the Covenant, the Tables of the Testimonies, the Cherubims, the Mercy-seate, and all the visible signes and tokens of the presence of God; and therefore Christ himselfe frequented the Temple; the Disciples were there daily, lauding and praising God; and all the Christians of the Primitiue Church did use to pray and preach in the Church; and this they ought to doe for these speciall reasons:

Chrysost. in act 3. hom.9.

The Church is the fittest place for publike prayers.

Luke 24.

Act.2 24.

First, That out of many people they might gaine the more unto Christ; for as it is good fishing in the Sea, where there are fishes innumerable, so it is good preaching when we see a good company of people; there is hope of gayning some where we see so many; and therefore it is good for all men to frequent the Church.

1 Reason. Gualterus in Act.

Secondly, that they might make a publique confession of their faith before the 2 Reason. Lucas Lossius in Act. postil.

the people, to shew that they were not ashamed of the Gospell and profession of Iesus Christ; they were not like unto Nicodemus that came to Christ by night, but durst not come by day, for feare he should be seene of the people, they would not serve him in corners; but they would professe him openly, that he likewise might receive them openly before his Father which is in Heaven.

Iohn 3.

3 Reason. Bullingerus.

Thirdly, that we might learne and know how unbeseeming private conventicles be, and how unfitting it is for Christians to have such secret meetings, (except onely in time of persecution:) and on the other side to shew how commendable, yea, and how honourable it is for us, to joyne our selves unto Gods publicke Congregation.

4 Reason.

Fourthly, That they may shew their charity and their unity one with another, by their meeting in the same place, with the same affection, and for the same purpose.

5 Reason. Ioel. 2. 16. 17.

Fiftly, that they might the sooner and the easier obtaine their requests at the hands of God; to have their sinnes forgiven, the judgements of God averted, and their necessities relieved; for so we finde that publicke prayers made in the Church of God, doth best and soonest obtaine these things in a double respect;

Publicke prayers will soonest obtaine our requests in a double respect.

That is, { 1. Of the place. 2. Of the Company. } For,

1 respect.

First, though Enter, præsenter Deus est ubiq; potenter; God in respect of his Essence and omnipotency is present every where; yet he is said to be more especially present in some places rather then others, in some speciall respects; as hee is said to be in Heaven more properly then in any other place; not in respect of his Essence, which the Heaven of heavens cannot containe; but in respect of that glorious manifestation of his excellency, and that fruition of his presence, which is there more cleerely shewed, then in any other place; so hee is ever ready to heare us, and to grant our desires in the Church rather then in any other place; not because he cannot, or will not heare us in all other places; but because there is a blessing annexed by his promise, to the publicke place of the devotion; not in regard of the dignity of the place, but because it pleased God to promise to heare the prayers that are made in that place; in a more speciall manner then he doth the prayers that are made in any other place whatsoever; as you may see most plainely in the 1. Kings 8.

1. Kings 8.

2 Respect.

Secondly: in respect of the company which doe gather themselves together into this place, we may more easily obtaine our requests in the Church, then in any other place; Nam si duo magna possunt, quanto magis plures? For if the prayer of one righteous man availeth much, or the prayer of two or three, when they are gathered together in his Name, as our Saviour saith; then how much more shall the prayers of a multitude of Gods servants doe? And therefore we should never excommunicate our selves upon any occasion, from this publicke place of devotion; but we should ever frequent the house of God; and weare out the thresholds of his doores: remember what the Prophet saith, I was glad when they said, come, let us goe up into the house of the Lord: and be ashamed of them, Qui toto anno vix semel in Ecclesia conspiciuntur; which are scarce seene in the Church once a yeere: such as are our Recusant Papists, that despise our Church, and refuse our Congregations; and our proude Professors, that thinke the Ministers more bound to come to them unto their owne houses, then themselves are to come to the house of God; and so all idle and lazy Christians, that a short little way, or a shower of raine, or some such like, the least impediment, will easily detaine them from the Church of God, and especially if there be no Sermon, they can reade, and they can pray at home. But alas, have they such a promise to be heard at home, as in the Church? or shall they not rather be condemned for staying at home, and neglecting the Church? for such are worse then the very Iewes, because they drew neere unto GOD with their lippes, & honoured him with their mouthes; but these give him neither speech nor presence in his house of service, they may say, they pray and they beleeve; but they give no

Psal. 122. 1.

Chrysost. hom. 2. in 2. Cor. 1.

Ambros. Ser. 19. in Psal. 119. Esay 29. 13.

good

good example unto others, neither doe they ſhew their faith by their good workes, as we are exhorted to doe: and therefore they may well feare the wrath of God to fall upon them for this contempt; for to be out of the Church upon the appointed day and time of prayer, (without exceeding urgent extraordinary occaſion) is in my judgement, like Saint Peters being out of the ſhip; or Shemies being out of Ieruſalem; the one may ſinke for his raſhneſſe, the other die for his forgetfulneſſe; and ſo may theſe periſh for their negligence, if the Son of God be not more mercifull unto them, then the ſonne of David was to Shemei; and therefore viſite not your friends in the time of publicke prayer, leſt God ſhould viſite you with ſome mortall ſickneſſe; caſt not your accounts on the Sabbath day, leſt God ſhould then call you to give your laſt account in a fearefull judgement; and above all, play not then in your houſes, when you ſhould be at prayer in the houſe of God, leſt God ſhould then ſmite you in earneſt, and your play would prove to be like the play of Abners ſervants, nothing elſe but death & deſtruction: but all excuſes ſet a part, let us all frequent the Church, and there pray to God for grace, if we would have God to be mercifull unto our ſoules.

2 Sam. 2 16.

CHAP. III.

Of the time when we muſt pray, and of the manner how we ought to pray.

FOurthly, touching the time when we muſt pray, Saint Paul bids us to pray continually, and in the Epiſtle to the Colloſſians, & ſo in that to the Epheſians, we are adviſed to be inſtant in prayer, & quidem omni tempore, and that at all times: But this is not ſo to be underſtood, as that wee ſhould doe nothing but pray (as the Heretickes called Euchytæ profeſſed to do;) for prayer is conſidered two manner of wayes.

4 The time when we ſhould pray. Coloſſ. 4 2. Epheſ. 6. 18.

Prayer conſidered.

First, as it reſpecteth the cauſe, which is a certaine vehement deſire of charity: and ſo in minde and ſpirit it is perpetuall; Quia in fide, ſpe, & charitate, continuato deſiderio, ſemper oramus; Becauſe in Faith, Hope, and Charity, with a continuall deſire, we doe alwayes pray, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; and the ſpirit helpeth our infirmities, & maketh interceſſion for us with groanings that cannot be expreſſed: and thus every Chriſtian man may ſay with the Church in the Canticles, Though I ſleepe, yet mine heart waketh; or, though I doe not alwayes pray with my tongue, yet my deſires doe alwaves ſpeake unto God.

2 Wayes.

1 Way.

Rom. 8. 26.

2 Way.

Secondly, as it reſpects its owne ſpoper reaſon and manner to be done, and ſo it ought to endure ſo long, as without tediouſnes or wearines, it may be ſtirred up by the zeale and feruor of the inward deſire of the heart: and therefore we ſay that,

1. Aliud eſt ſermo multus
2. Aliud eſt diuturnus affectus.

It is one thing to ſpeake alwayes; and another thing to deſire continually: & that it is one thing to pray with the voyce and tongue; and another thing to pray in minde and ſpirit; Now you muſt underſtand that in heart and affection we ſhould alwayes thinke of God, & commend our ſelves by our deſires unto him continually; and whether we eate or drinke, worke or play, ſleepe or wake, or whatſoever we doe elſe, we ſhould deſire all to be according to his will, for the glory of his Name; that he ſeeing our deſires, may grant our requeſts, to give us grace & glory; that ſo both mentalis & manualis oratio (as the old Poſtillers terme them) our outward actions, and our inward affections may be as continuall prayers, crying alwayes in the eares of God: but in voice & tongue, we are not injoyned alwayes to pray, but to keepe our appointed times both in our private and in our publicke prayers; and as often as occaſion ſhall be offered, either extraordinary afflictions befall us, or ſome bleſſings beſtowed on us; wee ſhould, over and beſides our uſuall times, betake our ſelves to our extraordinary prayers, either for our deliverance from our troubles, or of thankefulnes for our bleſſings received.

4 We ſhould ever pray in heart and affection.

First,

1 Private prayers.

First, for private prayers, although in respect of the efficacy, and powerfull moving of God, to obtaine our requests, or the honour that we shew unto God, I cannot equalize it with publicke prayers; yet (as I said before) this argueth more familiaritie with God, and is the truest triall of a Christian man, & in some respects yeeldeth better fruit of honour unto God, and more profite unto our selves, then the publicke prayers usually doth, or conveniently can doe; because that in a private prayer a man may both aske those things, & confesse those sins which in the face of the Church he would be loath to doe; and therefore the practise of Gods servants, the Counsell of Gods Church, and the precept of Christ himselfe, should exceedingly move us to the practise of this excellent exercise; for Isaac every evening would walke abroad to talke with God; Daniel would never misse to pray to God three times every day; and the Prophet David saith seven times a day will I praise thee, because of thy righteous judgements; and I have read it decreed in one of the Councels, that every Christian man should pray unto God twice at least every day; that is, at morning when he riseth, and at night when he goeth to bed: and especially before he goeth to bed; for as Seneca saith most truly of men rising in the morning;

Gen. 14. 63.

Dan. 6. 13.

Psal. 119. 164.

Quem dies vidit veniens superbum,
Hunc dies vidit fugiens jacentem:

Many a man rose well in the morning, and hath beene seene dead before the evening.

So may I say of men going into their beds, many have beene seene going lively into the same, and never seene alive come out againe: and therefore every man should so prepare himselfe when he goeth into his bed, as if he went into his grave; for as Menander saith; ὑπνος τὸ μικρὸν τοῦ θανάτου μυστήριον Sleepe is nothing else but a short kinde of death, and so the Poet saith, Stulte quid est somnus gelida nisi mortis imago? Sleepe is the image of death; And so

Sleepe like death.

Somnus ut est mortis, sic lectus imago sepulchri;

As sleepe is the image of death; so our beds are the very pictures of our graves.

And our Saviour Christ doth most earnestly exhort every man to private prayer, saying, When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and shut the doore, and pray unto thy Father in private, and he that seeth thee in secret, will reward thee openly; and therefore every man should appoint certaine times unto himselfe, for his private prayer to God.

2 Publicke prayers. That we should never misse the appointed time for publicke prayers.

Secondly, as we should not misse our appointed times of private prayers; so much lesse, should we omit the injoyned times for Gods publicke service; for God himselfe hath appointed us a day in the weeke to serve him, & to pray unto him: he might have injoyned sixe for himselfe, and have left but one for thee; but he did in a maner make himselfe poore to inrich us; leaving sixe for us to doe our owne affaires, and requiring but one for himselfe to be served by us. And our Church hath appointed an houre or two of that day, to pray and to praise our God.

What a danger it is to neglect publicke prayers.

And yet wee see many times on that day, yea, sometimes in that houre of prayers, the Taverns full, and the Churches empty; and as those men in the Gospell had each one his severall excuse, for not comming unto the supper; so have these their exceptions for not comming unto the Sermon; some like not the Preacher, others have not leisure; some visit their friends, which is a deede of Charity; others cast their accounts, which is a point of Policy, to see how the world goes with them; others wearied with cares, it may bee with gaming all night before, doe rest and sleepe, which is an act of necessitie; others playing at dice, or at cards, or at bowles, or some other game, and all but for their recreation, which is a thing allowed; & they will all say, God forgive us, and they thinke that is enough. But alas beloved, what if God should dislike thee, for disliking him, whom he hath appointed to teach thee, or should visit these visiters with some mortall sicknes, & send their soules presently to hel, because their bodies were then absent

absent from the Church? or what if he should then call the accounters of their wealth unto an account for their deedes, or smite in his indignation those drousie sleepers with some deadly apoplexie, and those impious players with some fearefull vengeance? I trow they would unfainedly wish to have beene rather praying in the Church with the congregation, then either visiting, or counting, or sleeping, or playing for gaine or recreation.

Ob. But you will say, that you hope God is mercifull, and you trust in him, and therefore he will not be so severe against you, as we are to prach unto you.

Sol. I answer, that you may trust in Gods mercy, but I know no ground that you have for it; for they that call on him shall be saved; and the righteous shalbe preserved; and he will be mercifull to them that feare him; there is no question of it: but that they which neglect Gods service, should have any part in Gods mercies, they may thinke to have it, but I know no promise in the world they have for it; and therefore if we desire God to heare us, & doe looke for the blessing of salvation, let us goe into his Church to heare his voice, & to pray unto him in this appointed time of Devotion; and seeing the Lord requireth us, to watch with him but one houre, to doe him service, yea, for our owne happinesse; let us take great heed unto our selves, that wee robbe him not of that one houre, and so commit such fearefull wickednesse, so offensive to God, and so dangerous to our owne soules.

To hope for Gods mercy, and to neglect Gods service is aine presumption.

Fiftly, for the manner how we ought to pray, the Apostle saith, we know not how to pray as we ought; Quia nihil tam longe distat a nobis, quam orare ut decet; because nothing is harder for us to doe, then to pray as we should: and therefore our Saviour was most carefull to teach us how to pray, both in the matter and in the manner of Prayer.

¶ The manner how to pray.

Christ did set us downe a perfect pattern of prayer.

1 In matter.

First, In matter, when you pray, say thus, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c. to make them ashamed of their impious conceits which reject this heavenly prayer, and affect those monstrous prayers of their owne begettings, whose birth precedeth their conceptions; for in this Prayer, nothing is wanting that should be desired, nothing is more then ought to he required.

I might here inlarge this Treatise into a Volume, to expresse the excellencies, and to explaine the mysteries, and so comment upon this Prayer, and upon every particular petition of the same, but that I see my booke swelled already into a bigger volume then at the first I did suppose it would, and I know many famous and worthy men have most worthyly and learnedly left many excellent expositions upon the same, which you may finde obujously in every place.

2 In manner.

Secondly, In manner he left his owne example, when he prayed; for in the Garden of Gethsemane, Delights of the Saints.

1. He kneeled downe, in all humilitie.
2. He said, Father, in the assurance of Faith.
3. He said, O my Father, to shew his zeale.
4. He prayed three times, to shew his constancy.
5. Vpon the Crosse he said, Father forgive them, to shew his charitie; And,
6. Throughout all his life he was a true server of God, and delighted onely in doing the will of God, to shew his pietie.

And all this he did to teach us to pray, first, in humilitie; secondly, in faith; thirdly, in zeale; fourthly, in constancy; fiftly, in charitie; sixtly, in pietie.

1 That we ought to pray in all humilitie.

First, In humilitie; because the prayer of him that humbleth himselfe pierceth the skies, and will not depart untill God heareth it, saith the Son of Syrach;

2 Consideration should humble us.

Now there be two things that should teach us to be humbled.

1 Our owne miseries.

First, the consideration of our owne miseries, what poore and miserable creatures we be, wormes and no men, dust and ashes; and therefore why art thou proud thou dust and ashes.

2 Gods greatnes.

Secondly, the consideration of Gods greatnesse, to whom thousand thousands of Angels doe administer: Varus Germinus was wont to say to Cæsar, Qui apud te, O Cæsar, audent dicere, magnitudinem tuam ignorant, qui non audent, humanitatem

Varro Cæs. his saying to Cæsar.

nitatem tuam nesciunt; they that dare speake to thee, doe not know thy greatnes, they that dare not, are ignorant of thy humanity and meekenesse; I may say farre better, our God is meeke and lowly in heart, that we may speake unto him; but he is so great in Majestie and Power, that one ought to speake in all humilitie, and that, not with the Gentiles, whose heatheniſh fashion was adorare ſigillaria ſua reſidendo, to worship their Gods as they sate, but meekely kneeling upon our knees, that we may shew both inward and outward humilitie; for this was the practise not onely of great sinners, or of men of meane estate in the world, but also of the holiest Saints, and of the greatest men of greatest account in the world, Kings, Princes and Monarches, Apostles, Prophets, and Priests, Moses, Aaron, David, Salomon, Samuel, and Christ himselfe, the Sonne of God did often use to fall downe, to kneele and prostrate himselfe upon the ground when he prayed unto his Father; & prostratus in terra orat medicus, & non inclinatur ægrotus; and shall this heavenly Physitian kneele, and we thinke much to stoope?

Cyprian. 9. ad Don.

O then beloved, seeing thousand of thousands of heavenly Angels doe administer unto the Lord our God, consider with thy selfe saith Saint Bernard, Quanta cum humilitate debet rana paupercula odorare eum? with what great humilitie ought we poore wormes of the earth to adore him? And therefore, as Eusebius reporteth of that most Christian Constantine, that it was his usuall custome, every day to shut up himselfe close into some secret place of his Palace, and there upon his bended knees & with a most submisse humble voice to make his devout prayers and soliloquies un o Almightie God; so let us worship God, not onely in our inward mindes, but also outwardly with our bodies, and, as I said before, meekely kneeling upon our knees.

2 Wee ought to pray in faith.

Secondly, In faith; Quia juxta mensuram fidei erit mensura impetrandi; because the more faith we have, the more grace we shall receive; and this is proved unto us, out of the examples of them that came to Christ; for the ruler of the Synagogue beleeved, that if Christ came and laide his hands upon his daughter she should bee healed; the woman with the bloody-fluxe beleeved, that if shee might but touch the hemme of his garments she should be healed; but the Centurion said, dic verbum, doe but speake the word and my servant shall be whole; and so we finde that every one of them received according as he beleeved: and therefore every man that prayes to God should be like the Leaper in the 8. of Matth. who though he was weake in body, yet was he strong in faith; for in regard of the Law he ought not to have come, and in regard of his sickneſſe he was scarce able to come; and yet venit, he came unto Christ, though non tam passibus corporis quam fide cordis; not so much with the feete of his body as by the faith of his heart; for had his heart beene no better then his legges, and his faith no better then his feete, hee would never have troubled himselfe to come unto Christ: so ought every man, to draw neere unto God, in the assurance of faith; quia irrisio Dei est, si quid illum ores quod exoraturum te non certe confidas; because it is a mocking of God, saith Pellican, to pray unto him, and to doubt that we shall not have our requests; therefore Christ teacheth us to say, Our Father, to make us confident of obtaining, and concludeth with Amen, significare indubitanter à Domino conferri quod petitur; to signifie that we shall undoubtedly receive what we faithfully desire, saith S. Augustine: And therefore when we pray to God, let us draw neere unto him with a true heart, in assurance of Faith, that wee shall be sure to have, either what we desire of him, or what he seeth good for us.

Matth. 8.

Aug. hom. 23.

Pellic. in Matth.

Aug. de temp. ser. 182.

3 That we ought to pray in zeale.

Thirdly, In zeale and affection; because the Lord respecteth not much babling, sed ad cordis potius vocem quam ad corporis aures eius apertæ sunt; because he lookes rather unto the desire of the heart, then he doth to the voice of the tongue, saith Saint Bernard; for hee heareth the desire of the poore, when hee stoppeth his eares against the prayers of the hypocrite; and therefore wee finde that the outward voice without the inward attention and devotion of the heart will availe us nothing at all; God never regarding the voice of the tongue talking with him, when the thoughts of the heart are wandring in the world; whereas many times times wee finde that an earnest seeking with the heart, hath prevailed without any words uttered by the tongue, as Moses when hee cried to God with his heart, and yet opened not his mouth; for that is most true which Saint Gregory saith, nanto minus quis clamat, quanto minus desiderat, & tanto fortius cœlos penetrat quanto fortius desiderat; the more earnestly we desire any thing the more loudly we doe cry unto God, and the colder is our desire, the slower is our calling on him, and the harder to obtaine of him: and therefore when we pray to God, O let us not be like the Iewes, who drew neere unto him with their mouthes, and their hearts were farre from him; but as the Apostle saith, that he will pray with his mouth, and he will pray with his understanding, so let us pray with our hearts and affections, and not suffer our wandring thoughts to walke about worldly vanities, when our tongues are talking about heavenly things.

Exod. 14. 15.

Esay 29. 14.

1 Cor. 14. 15.

Fourthly, with perseverance: because that good is done in vaine, which is not continued unto the end; and so I shewed at large in my Treatise of the resolution of Pilate: and therefore our zeale herein should bee like the fire that the Vestall Virgins kept in Rome, or rather like the Sacrificing fire upon the Altar, that ever burnt, and never went out.

4 That we ought to persevere in prayer
Resolution of Pilate,
Levit. 6. 13.

Fiftly, In charitie; because God will not forgive us, nor give us any thing, except we forgive one another.

5 That we should pray in charitie.

Sixtly, In piety; because God heareth not sinners, but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth, and so Saint Iohn saith, if our hearts condemne us not, then have we confidence towards God, and whatsoever we aske we receive of him, because we keepe his Commandements, and doe those things that are pleasing in his sight; et tum cor nostrum fiduciam in oratione accepit, cum sibi vita pravitas nulla contradicit; and our hearts haue then onely confidence towards God, when there is no pravitie of our life, nor any wickednesse of our conversation to contradict it, saith Saint Gregory: and therefore Saint Basil saith, that a prayer should be filled up, non tam syllabis quam operibus; not so much with words as with workes; because it is the prayer of a righteous man, as the Apostle saith, which availeth much with God, and not the prayer of sinners, which (as the Prophet saith) shall be turned into sinne, because he taketh the name of God in vaine, when he useth the same in his mouth, and yet hateth to be reformed. And therefore, seeing the Lord himselfe saith, that although wee should multiply our prayers unto him, at all times, and in every corner, yet he will not heare us, if our hands be full of blood, or our hearts full of malice and envy towards our neighbours, let us pray every where, lifting up pure hands, as the Apostle saith, and let us wash our selves from all sinnes, and be ready to doe all good, if wee would obtaine any thing at the hands of God. And so you see to whom, when, how, and for what, we ought to pray.

6 That when wee pray we should cleanse our selves from all sinne.
Gregor. in moral.

Iohn 9. 31.

Psal. 109. 6.

Esay 1. 15.

1 Tim. 2. 8.

Chap. IIII.

Of the motives that should perswade and move every man to to pray.

The motives that should move us to pray.

Now there bee many reasons that should move us to pray continually, but especially the charge of God, seeke yee my face, and that in a double respect.

Psal. 27. 8.

That is, { 1. In respect of God. 2. In respect of our selves. } and

First, in respect of God; because it is an essentiall part of Gods worship, whereby we doe most chiefly honour God, by acknowledging and professing him, first, to be every where, secondly, to be the giver of all goodnesse, thirdly, to be full of pitie, fourthly, to be almightie, fiftly, to be bountifull, sixtly, to be faithfull and true in all his promises, and so forth.

1 In respect of God, Prayer an essentiall part of Gods worship.

1 In respect of our selves. Mat 7.7. Iames 4. 3. Prayer how available it is for men. 1 To obtaine grace. as, Whatsoever we aske. Iob 16.23.

Secondly, In respect of our selves wee ought to seeke unto God by prayer; because of the necessitie and utilitie of prayer; for this is the onely way to obtaine good things; aske and you shall have, seeke and you shall finde, saith our Saviour; and you have not, because you aske not, saith the Apostle: And if wee aske and pray, we shall finde the same profitable.

First, to obtaine whatsoever we aske, more then we aske, and better then wee aske; For,

Luke 16.21.

Prayer obtaineth whatsoever we aske.

Mat.7.7.

Luke 18.14.

Act.7.56.

First, he will give us whatsoever we aske, as our Saviour sheweth; Hitherto you have asked nothing, but now, Whatsoever you aske the Father in my name, hee will give it you; For, though there be many semblances betwixt us and Lazarus, he being a beggar full of sores, and wee beggers full of sinnes, and he desiring to be refreshed with the crummes of bread which fell from the rich mans board, and we have neede to be relieved with the crummes of mercy that fall from our Masters Table; yet herein wee are in a farre better case then Lazarus was, in that it was his hard hap to knocke at the doore of a cruell and a miserable Caitiffe, that would at no time open unto him, nor yet give him any thing, the least thing, the crummes of bread that he de desired, to save his life; but we knocke at the doore of a most kinde and mercifull Father, who saith, Aske, and you shall have, Seeke, and you shall finde, Knocke, and it shall be opened unto you, that you may enter into eternall life; And so wee finde the Publican did but aske for mercy, and he had it, and went home more justified then the Pharisee, and Stephen did but knocke at the doore of Heaven, and presently the heavenly gates were opened unto him, and hee saw Iesus standing at the right hand of God; and so whosoever truely and humbly besought Christ for any thing, we never reade in all the Gospell that he was denied it.

Ob.

But it may be some will say, I have often called upon God, and he heareth not; I have asked and he granteth not; and therefore how doth he performe his promise to give unto us whatsoever we aske?

Sol.

Why God deferreth to give us what we desire. 1 Reason. 2 Reason.

I answere, that God sometimes makes as though he heareth not, not because he resolveth to deny us, but he deferreth to grant our requests; either,

First, to let us further know our owne wants and miseries, which if hee would helpe at the first, we should never perceive them to the full.

Secondly, to trie our faith and patience, whether we will continue constant in relying on him, though he kill us, as Iob speaketh; or, if he presently relieve us not, whether we be ready to kill our selves, as desperate Saul hath done.

3 Reason.

Et quod a nobis avidius desideratur, eo de nobis suavius lætatur. Greg. in Moral.

Thirdly, to kindle in us the fervor of greater devotion and desire to obtaine the things that we perceive we want: Quia desideria dilatione crescunt; because delayes doe increase desires, Et diu desiderata dulcius obtinentur; and the more earnestly we desire any thing, the more joyous it is being obtained; and therefore as Laban kept Iacob a long while from his yongest daughter, whom he loved best, that his love might be the more increased continually towards her; so God oftentimes holdeth us for a time in suspence, that so he may the more sharpen our appetite, and inflame our desire more and more to the thing that we doe desire.

God knoweth best when to relieve us.

And this the Prophet David knew, when he said, I cry unto thee in the day time, and thou heares not, and in the night season; and yet this is not to be thought folly in me, as the Septuagint reades it; For, though the world perhaps might deeme it a point of great simplicity, to cal and cry to him that makes as though he heareth not, by regarding not our prayers, as it seemeth, by not granting our requests; yet he knew this folly of the faithful to be farre wiser then all the wisedome of the world; because, as the same Prophet David speaketh, The Lord is a sure refuge in due time of trouble; hee is a sure refuge in trouble, but especially in due time of trouble; because, as we know our troubles, so the Lord knowes the due time to helpe us out of our troubles, when we our selves doe not well know the same. And therefore if we call upon God, and God maketh as though he heareth not, yet let us not say; Deus meus quare me dereliquisti? My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? but let us still call and cry to God, and say unto our soules,

Quare

Quare dereliquisti Deum? Why hast thou forsaken God, and given over to pray unto him, when it is an infallible rule, that nunquam Deus deserit hominem, quousq; homo deserat Deum; that God never denies to heare man, untill man gives over and ceaseth to pray to God. Or else,

I answere as Saint Iames saith, that you aske and receive not, because you aske amisse, Aut præter verbum, aut non propter verbum; either not for Christ his sake, or not according to the word of Christ; not, as I shewed thee before, in humility, in faith, in charity, in piety; but, as the Church in the Canticles sought him, whom her soule loved, and found him not, because she sought him in her bed, that is carelesly and negligently; she sought him where he was not; Christ being not so easily found, especially upon beds of Downe, but rather in the Temple where his Father found him, or upō the Crosse where the thiefe did find him, or in the bramblebush where Moses saw him and there found him: so many men do seeke many times and finde not, because they seeke amisse, it may be for worldly things, where as they should first seeke for the Kingdome of Heaven, as our Saviour teacheth, and then all other things should be given unto them; and they knocke, and it is not opened unto them, because they knocke amisse, it may be too late, when the doore of grace and of mercy is shut; for otherwise it is most certaine, that never man asked any thing at the hands of God, but he had his request granted by God, unlesse he fainted and grew weary of asking; because the words of Christ must hold infallible, Whatsoever you aske the Father in my Name, he will give it you. Yea,

Why God denieth what we aske

Secondly, if we pray unto him, he will give us more then we aske; for the Centurian besought Christ only to speake a word, that his servant might be whole; but he had not onely the word whereby his servant was healed, but also many other words to his never-dying-praise, for that faith wherewith he beleeved, & whereby he should be saved; and the thiefe upon the Crosse desired onely to be remembred when Christ came unto his Kingdome; but Christ granted him that day to be with him in Paradise; and those blind men which besought Christ onely to restore their naturall sight, whereby they might see the light of the Sunne, had also the spirituall eyes of their soules opened, whereby they did beleeve in the Sonne of God; and so that man in the Gospell, whereby we may understand every sinnefull man, desired but three loaves onely to entertaine his guest, but his friend, that is, God, did give him as many as he needed; to shew unto us, that Christ is such a bountifull Master, that if we pray unto him, he will not onely give us what meane things we aske, but also many more excellent heavenly things, which he knoweth to be needfull for us. Yea,

2 More then we aske.

That God giveth more then we pray for.

Luke 11. 8.

Thirdly, he doth not onely give us what we aske, and more then we aske, but he giveth us also farre better things then we aske; for as Saint Peter gave the lame Creeple the health of his body, when he desired but a little almes to relieve his want; So God giveth us the health of our soules, when we desire the wealth of the world; and he inricheth us with Heavenly treasures, when we crave worldly vanities; because it is the property of God, saith S. Bernard, Dare prius quod potius; to give us first, what is best for us: And therfore whensoever we pray to God for any thing, we may be sure our prayers wil never be fruitles, but wil certainly bring us either those things that we ask, or things far better for us thē the things we aske; for God seeth that we desire many times such things, as we our selves afterwards should finde they had beene hurtfull to us, if we had obtained them; even as many times wee give great thankes unto God that many things were denied unto us, which we desired of him: and therfore God doth well, & he doth good unto us, in denying what we desire, when we desire things hurtfull for our selves.

3 Better then we aske. Act. 3. 5.

That God giveth us better things then we desire.

We know not what is good for our selves.

And yet because our prayers shall never returne empty away from God, Christ giveth us those things that are healthfull for us when we aske for things hurtfull, if we aske them as we ought to doe; for a man may pray rightly, and yet for things hurtfull; because we know not what is good for our selves: And therfore S. Augustine saith excellently well, Quod multis propitius Deus non tribuit quod volunt, ut tribuat quod utile est; that God denieth many times his Saints, with whō he is well pleased, what they would have, that he may bestow upon them, what they should have; Quia audit Deus suos ad necessitatem, non ad voluntatem; Because God heareth his servants to give them what they neede, and not what they crave.

Quid prosit vel obsit, novit medicus non agrotus.

Aug Serm, 54.

God sheweth his love many times in denying us.

And so it is apparant, that as quadam concedit iratus, God granteth some things unto the wicked, when he is most angry with them, as he did the Quailes unto the Israelites, of whom the Psalmist saith, that while the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of the Lord came upon them, and consumed the wealthiest in Israel, Ita quadam negat propitius; so he denieth many things to whom he loveth, as he denied Elias when he desired to die, and the sonnes of Zebedee when they desired to sit, the one on his right hand, and the other on his left hand in his Kingdome, that is, in temporall Monarchie which they dreamed of: And he doth this, ut meliora tribuat, that he may bestow farre better things upon them then they desired for themselues; for so we find he denied Elias to die so meanely; that he might carry him up in a fiery Chariot most gloriously, and so he denied the sonnes of Zebedee that temporall honour which they desired, that they might both sit on his right hand in eternall felicity.

1 Reg 13 4.

Mark, 10.35.

Secondly, as prayer is most profitable to obtaine what is desired, so it is most availeable to prevent judgements threatned against us, as we may see in the examples of the Ninivites, and so likewise to remove judgements inflicted on us, as we may see in Iames 5.18. and in Reg. 8.53.

2 To prevent judgements. Ier. 26.19.

Thirdly, prayer is most availeable to preserve and no nourish all spirituall graces; for by this Saint Peters Faith was preserved, and the Collossians knowledge was increased, as the Apostle sheweth.

3 To preserve our graces. Luke 23.32. Col 1.9.

Fourthly, prayer is the chiefest meanes to weaken sinne in us, and to procure our sinnes remitted unto us, as our Saviour himselfe sheweth, when he teacheth us to pray unto God, to forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespasse against us.

4 To weaken sin.

Fiftly, prayer Sanctifieth the creatures for our use, and maketh them to become usefull and healthfull, which otherwise might prove pernicious and hurtfull unto us.

5 To sanctifie the creatures. 1 Tim. 4.5.

Sixtly, prayer overcommeth all creatures; for it divided the red sea, it stopped the heavens, it opened the same againe, it brought Ionas from the Whales bellie, Daniel from the Lions den, and Saint Peter from the dungeon: it overcomes all men, quia plus valet unus sanctus orando quam innumeri peccatores praliando; one man praying will availe more then many men fighting, saith the Glosse upon the prayer of Moses, when Ioshuah fought with Amalech; and it overcomes the very divels, which goe not out, but by prayer and fasting; for as Christ made a scourge of small cords to drive the buyers and sellers out of the Temple; so the prayers of a Christian, consisting of many petitions, is like that scourge of small cords, able to drive out all divels, all sins from the soule of a Christian, which is the Temple of the holy Ghost.

6 To overcome all things.

Seventhly, prayer prevaileth against God himselfe; for I pray thee let me goe, saith God unto Iacob, for the day approacheth; not so saith Iacob, I will not let thee goe except thou blesse me: O Iacob wilt not thou let God goe? no saith he, except he blesse me: I, but will God take this well at thy hands, that thou wilt not let him goe? O yes; for he saith, my delight is to be with the sonnes of men; and so Iacob prevailed with God, and his name was called Israel: And I would to God that we would also wrastle with God by prayer, as never to let him go untill he blesse us, for then we shall be sure he will not goe at all; because the blessed shall be called to him, come ye blessed, and the cursed onely shall be taken away from the presence of the Lord. But, Moses prevailed further; for Iacob prayed for himselfe, Moses for others; Iacob for a friend of God, that served him, Moses for the enemies of God, that dishonoured him, by making a Calfe in Horeb, and worshipping the molten image; and therefore Iacob prevailed when God was well-pleased, but Moses prevailed when God was angry, and his wrath did burne like fire, and he said in the fiercenesse of his wrath, suffer me now that I may destroy them

Prayer only prevaileth with God. Gen 32.26.

Prayer appeaseth the wrath of God. Exod. 32.10.

them all at once; yet Moses would not, but he fell upon his face and prayed, and so standing in the gappe, he prevailed with God, and turned away his wrathfull indignation from them: so prayer overcomes him at all times, when he is pleased, when he is angry; for our prayer is like a cord wherewith we binde the hands of God, that when he is ready to smite us for our sinnes, he is fast bound by our prayers that he cannot punish us: and therefore when the Iewes despised and neglected this duty of prayer, and the Lord powred out his wrath upon them for their wickednesse, the Prophet Esay complaineth, that there was none that called upon God, that rose up to take hold upon him, that is, by calling upon his name, to binde his hands with the cord of prayer.

O powerfull prayer, that art able to binde, to binde the hands of God, with bands more indissoluble then those seven greene withs that bound the hands of Sampson! what shall I say of thee? I might say as much, as Saint Paul saith of faith. By prayer, the families of Seth did serve the Lord, for then they began to call upon the name of the Lord, saith the Text; by prayer, Abraham obtained, that if tenne righteous men should be found in five Cities, the wicked should be all spared for those tenne mens sake; by prayer, Moses devided the red sea; by prayer, Ioshua stayed the course of the heavenly Orbes; by prayer, Phinees stayed the wrath of God, that it consumed not all the Israelites; for when Phinees stood up and prayed, then the plague ceased, saith the Psalmist; by prayer, Ionas overcame the great Leviathan, and made him, which otherwise would have beene a grievous gulfe to destroy him, when he had swallowed him up quicke, to become as a ship to save him, and to bring him to the Haven where he would be; and what shall I say more? for the time would be too short for me to tell of David, Samuel and the Prophets, of the Apostles and Martyrs, and all the Saints of God, who through prayer subdued their enemies, wrought wonders, obtained the promises, stopped the mouthes of Lyons, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, of weake were made strong, waxed valiant in battell, turned to flight the armies of the aliens, and in the end all of them whom the world was not worthy of, through prayer, obtained eternall life; for whosoever calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be saved, and these all called upon his name, and he heard them.

Iudg. 16. 8, 28. Heb. 11.

Gen 4. 26.

And besides all this, it is worth the observing that (as Lactantius doth most truly say) summus colendi Dei ritus est ex ore justi hominis ad Deum directa laudatio; the chiefest part of Gods worship is an humble faithfull prayer, and praises out of the mouth of a righteous man: and therefore Saint Paul setting downe the whole armour of a Christian, putteth prayer as the chiefest part of all: and so Zanchius saith, that this is; optimum genus, ideoque ultimò ab Apostolo, armaturæ explicatum; the best part of all our Christians weapons, and therefore last expressed by the Apostle; because that unlesse Gods helpe be craved by prayer, reliqua arma parum prosunt; all the other armour will availe us nothing; and therefore though we be wholly armed with all the rest of Gods armour, yet ought we most humbly to acknowledge our owne imbecilitie, and most earnestly to sue for the helpe and assistance of God by hearty prayer.

Lactant. de vero cultu l. 6. c. 25. f. 399.

Zanch. in c. 6. Ep. ad Ephes.

Prayer the chiefest part of Gods service.

But here perhaps some will say, it cannot be more excellent then faith, because the Apostle saith, above all take the shield of Faith.

I answer, that this armour of a Christian, is of two kindes.

1. Ad defendendum, to defend our selues.
1. Ad feriendum, to smite our foes.

Of the first kinde the Apostle nameth these five,

The armour of a Christian of two kinds.

First, Truth; secondly, Righteousnesse; thirdly, readinesse to imbrace the Gospell of Christ; fourthly, Faith; Fiftly, Hope.

And of these indeed, Faith and Hope are the chiefest; but they are are not more excellent then the other of the other kinde; for then they should be more excellent then the Word of God, which is the sword of the spirit: and therefore I say that prayer is armatura armaturæ, that armour which preserveth all our armour unbattered and unbroken; for though Faith and Hope and the other graces bee most excellent, yea, of invaluable and inconceivable worth, yet seeing there is a difference betwixt Gods graces, and that as one Starre differeth from another in glory, so one grace may differ from another in excellency, both in regard of the qualitie and efficacie of the same, and so bring a greater weight of glory to the receivers and well users of the same, I say of prayer, as Salomon saith of the vertuous woman, that this surmounteth them all; for, it is a rule in Logick, the end is ever better then the meanes that bring us to the end, but preaching, hearing, understanding and beleeving are media, the meanes whereby wee are brought to pray; and therefore the Apostle taketh this for his Text, and maketh it to be the basis and ground-worke of all his subsequent discourse, he that calleth upon the name of the Lord shall bee saved; but then saith hee, how, or by what meanes shall this be done? How shall they call upon him in whom they have not beleeved? How shall they beleeve in him of whom they have not heard? How shall they heare without a Preacher? and so he maketh preaching, hearing, and beleeving, to be the meanes whereby wee come to call upon the name of the Lord, that wee may be saved: And it is a rule in all sciences, that the practice is better then the theorie of any thing; and therefore prayer which is the practice of all pietie, must be better then all other theoricall graces whatsoever: And it is an axiome of our Saviour Christ, that beatius est dare quam accipere; it is a more blessed thing to give then to receive, and therefore prayer, which is the onely grace whereby wee render unto God that praise and glory which is due unto his name, must needes be more excellent then all the other graces, whereby we receive blessings from God.

That the gift of prayer is the chiefest of all Gods graces.

Joel.2.32.

Rom.10.14.

And is prayer so superexcellent a grace, super alias caput extulit omnes; that it surpasseth all other graces? then surely I cannot choose but commend that great devotion of our ancestors and forefathers, that were so zealous, so instant, and so constant in continuall praying: Indeede I bewaile their ignorance and their blindnesse, that knew not well for what, or to whom, or how to pray: but I know God will not breake the bruised reed, and the smoking flaxe he will not quench; and therefore, though their prayers wanted the true light of knowledge, which no doubt would have made them more acceptable unto God, and more comfortable to themselves, yet I doe assure my selfe God despised not the smoake of their devotion, nor rejected the desire of their hearts; yea, seeing that (as Saint Augustine saith,) melior est fidelis ignorantia quam temeraria scientia; an humble zealous ignorance, is better then a rash proud and disdainfull knowledge, I doubt not but they pleased God farre better with their devout ignorant praying, then many of us doe with our negligent and never praying knowledge; for they ascended to the highest steppe of all devotion and pietie, which is prayer, and many of us never goe beyond the lowest step, which is hearing; they did what was commanded, and knew it not, many of us know it and doe it not; they spent most of their time in praying, and most of us spend our time in hearing; and so placing all religion, almost in hearing, wee are like those foolish women, which are ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge, nor willing to come to the practise of the truth.

How our forefathers exceeded us in devotion. Camit.ult.

But, though the hearing of Gods Word bee the chiefest outward ordinarie meanes, to beget Faith and Hope and all other graces in the hearts of Gods elect, and therefore must not by any meanes be neglected if we would be saved, yet seeing that (as the Apostle saith) not the hearers of the Law but the doers of the Law shalbe justified, & that prayer is the chiefest part of Gods service, yea, and that it is,

First, the onely request that Christ made unto his Church, when hee tooke his last farewell of her on earth, saying, O let me heare thy voice, the companions hearken to thy voice, O cause me to heare it: that is, by thy continull prayers and supplications unto me;

Secondly, the greatest comfort of a Christian man; for wee are all so full of miseries while we live in this wretched world, that there is no man living, but if hee could have knowne, before he was borne, what miseries must befall him in this this life, he would have heartily prayed that the wombe of his birth might be the tombe of his buriall: and yet in all the calamities that man must undergoe, hee can have no greater comfort then hee hath by praying to God; for by this alone we walke with Angels, we talke with God, we relate our griefe, we bewaile our sorrowes, and being alone, wee have the best and sweetest conference in the world;

O then beloved brethren, as Nazianzen saith of Gorgonia, that she was given to pray, Ut genua terræ contreverint; that her knees seemed alwayes to stoope and grow to the ground, by reason of her continuall kneeling in hearty prayers; and as Eusebius saith of Iames the brother of the Lord, that his knees by reason of his continuall kneeling in prayers, became as hard as Camels knees, that is, benummed and bereaved of all sense and feeling; so let us use continually to pray; and if wee would obtaine any thing at the hands of God, or if we would overcome the malice of men, let us pray, and pray continually saith the Apostle; or if we be so full that we want nothing, yet we have neede to pray; for Christ prayed not onely in deserto, which was a place of distresse, but also in horto, in the garden, which was a place of pleasure, not onely in his agony, but also in his dignitie, when he should be made a King; to teach us that we have as much need to pray in prosperitie, as in adversity; to pray for helpe, that we enter not into temptation, and to pray for grace, that we may rightly use the grace of God: and therefore in all estates, and at all times pray; and in your prayers, pray for us. And so I come to the last part, which is the large extent of prayer.

That we have as great need to pray in prosperity as in adversity. Iohn 18.2. Iohn 6.

The fourth Part.

Chap. III.

For whom we ought to pray, generally for all men, more especially for the Magistrates, and most especially for the Ministers of Gods word.

SEcondly, having heard of the first part of the Apostles request, the act that you should doe, pray; wee are now to consider of the second part, which is the extention, for whom you should pray, for us, pray for us.

You must therefore pray first for your selves; it is of necessitie included, for nulli sapit, qui sibi non sapit; it is certaine, that hee which seldome prayeth for himselfe, will never pray for others: neither is it enough for us to pray for our selves, but we must pray one for another; for though the wicked, sibi nati, sibi vivunt, sibi damnati; are good for nothing; and therefore will pray neither for themselves, nor others; yet the godly will pray for themselves, and for all others.

That we ought to pray for all men.

First, Propter vniversalem vocationem; because we outwardly call all men, and preach to all men, every one that thirsteth, come to the waters, and therefore wee must pray for all men.

Secondly, Propter efficaciam gratiæ, because of the unspeakeable efficacy of this grace of prayer, which is able to obtaine of God, of these stones and stony-hearted sinners, to raise up children unto Abraham; for if the words of men bee so powerfull to move the affection, as that the Poet saith,

——quid facundia posset,
Re patuit, fortisq; viri tulit arma disertus.

then how much more powerfull is the word of God, which is the power of Christus vim verbis, vim gemmæ, vim dedit herbis, Verbis majorem, gemmis herbisq; minorem.

of God unto salvation to all that beleeve, and is able to divide the soule and the spirit: and if the word preached be so powerfull, how much more powerfull is the word of prayer? and therefore seeing we preach to all, why should we not pray for all?

Thirdly, Propter nostram ignorantiam, because God onely knoweth who are his, and we are none of his privie Counsellers, we know not whose names are written in the booke of life; nor when God will call any man unto his mercy; whether at the sixt houre, or at the ninth houre, or at the last houre; for as he that now goeth on his way weeping, may returne with joy, carrying his sheaves with him, so he that now goeth on in sinne, may with the prodigall childe, returne and finde grace: and we daily see, that one man, de quo desperamus convertitur, & fit optimus, & alter de quo multum præsumpseramus deficit & fit pessimus; of whom we despaired, is converted to be a good man, as Saul, to be a Saint Paul, and another of whom we conceived great hope, hath relapsed and became most wicked, as Iudas, Magus, and others, so that nec timor noster certus est, nec amor; neither our hope nor feare is sure; and therefore seeing wee know not who are Gods people, we are to hope well of all people, and therefore to pray for all; saying alwayes with our Liturgy, that it may please thee to have mercy upon all men.

More particularly the Apostle willeth us, that first of all praiers and supplications should be made for King and all in authoritie, because that not onely mans salvation, and the knowledge of the truth, but also the quietnesse of kingdomes, and whatsoever else tendeth to the benefite of the publicke weale, commeth by the power of prayer, as Saint Augustine saith; their place is high, their charge is great, and to be a King is to be a man full of cares,

——— cui mixta dolori
Gaudia nulla ferunt spes semper mixta timore.

Their sollicitous thoughts can have but little joy, and that joy is alwaies mixt with cares; yea, their very crownes containe nothing else but weighty affaires, the service of God, the safety of men, and so the whole charge both of Church and Common-wealth, ——— Quantum sit onus regnare probarunt.

And this sheweth how hard a thing it is to governe; and therefore it is our dutie most heartily to pray for our Kings, but not peremptorily to pry into the authorities or prerogatives of our Kings; for tolle regalia, tolle regem, if you take away the royalties, you leave no King; for Christ was a King, sed quia rex sine regno; but 1. King. 2, 22. because he seemed without his royalties, they would have no King but Cæsar; and therefore I say, that whosoever limiteth the prerogatives of an absolute King, hee may leave him to be a man, but he scarce leaves him to be a King; aske Abishag, and aske the kingdome saith Salomon, take the one and leave no other; but as the Iesuiticall Priests would have all Kings to be ruled by their Popes, so our puritanicall, Anabaptisticall people, would rule all Kings themselves by the rules of their clanculary Parliaments, and Parliamentall conventicles; and to that end they are ever limiting their authorities, & ever nibling at the prerogatives of free Monarchs; still affecting that government wherein themselves would have a large interest; 1. Sam. 8. But the Divine veritie teacheth otherwise, in the 1. Sam. 8. where the extent of the authority of free Monarchs is fully expressed, as I could, if I had time, easily prove it; and Iustinian saith, Beneplacitum regis, vigorem legis habet; the Kings good will hath the vigor and strength of a Law, that is, where there is no law to the contrary and Budæus saith as much in the pandects.

But then you will say, this is to make way for tyranny and not to maintaine their true authoritie.

I answere, their authoritie or what they may doe, is one thing, and their duty, or what they ought to doe, is another thing; the one they may exercise over men, and none can controll them, and for the other, if they doe ill they must render an account though they bee Kings, but to God not to men; for tibi soli peccavi, against God onely have they sinned, as the Prophet David saith;

and

and therefore when we speake of the authoritie or prerogatives of Kings, we doe it not to make them bold to doe what they list without feare, for with God there is no respect of persons, but if Coniah though he were as the signet on Gods right hand offend, he will cut him off; and they may see their duty in Deut. c. 17. from the 16. verse to the end; which I wish to God all Kings would reade often; that they may observe it alwayes; or else God will binde kings in fetters, and their Nobles with linkes of iron; therefore be wise, O yee Kings, and see what you doe, as well as what you may doe; but wee speake this to keepe the people in obedience, that are alwayes naturally inclined to kicke against authority, that they should ever obey and suffer, and never resist whatsoever betides them; for you must ever note a difference betwixt those actions of Kings and Princes, which are sine offensa, unblamable, and those which ought to be sine resistentia, unresistable; the first are those which are according to Gods Law; the second are those which are not onely good, for which they shall bee rewarded, but also those that are evill, according to their owne will, and contrary to the will of God, for which they shall be punished; for we finde by the example of David towards Saul, and by the precept of Saint Paul unto all Christians, that whatsoever they doe wee may not resist, wee may not touch Gods annointed, neither with hand, word, nor thought; and they shall finde it to their cost, that for all those things they doe amisse, they shall render a strict account to God; for though I say that wee are to suffer all things, sine resistentia, without resistance; yet I say not that wee must doe it, sine querela, without complaint to God, to be relieved; and you know what he saith, I will heare their cry and will helpe them: and I hold this to be the rule of true Christian obedience: And therefore wee should leave to pry into those things which are forbidden, and give our selves to pray for our Kings, which is commanded; for that is most pleasing to God, not displeasing unto them, necessary for the good, and profitable unto us all; for quo sublimior gloria est, eo major & cura est; the more eminent in place, the more neede of grace: and therefore Kings should not despise the prayers of the poorest, nor the poorest neglect to pray for their Kings; for though this is the best good that they can doe to pray for them, yet this good they can do unto the best; & we find that Hezekias the great & good King of Iuda, desired the prayers of Esayas, Daniel, that beloved Prophet of God, desired the prayers of Shadrach, Mesaach, and Abednego; & God cõmanded Iobs friends to desire the prayers of Iob; & so S. Paul the great Apostle of Iesus Christ, though he abounded in revelations and exceeded in the graces of Gods spirit, yet doth he in many places desire the prayers of all: and therefore let us pray for our Kings, and all such as are in authoritie, even for the good of our selves; because God many times sends evill Kings unto wicked people, and sets an ungodly man to rule over them, as a just punishment of their iniquitie; yea, sometimes he makes good Kings to become burthensome unto a land, as he did David when hee numbred Israel, for the sinnes and wickednesse of them that dwell therein; and on the other side, he makes evill men good Kings and governours, for the love that hee beareth unto all faithfull people; or, if still they continue evill, hee will soone take them off, if the people truely and faithfully serve him, and pray unto him for their Kings continually as they ought to doe; because God hath promised to heare the prayers of the faithfull, and to grant unto them their requests.

And as wee are injoyned to pray for our Magistrates, so here the Apostle sheweth that we ought also to pray for our Ministers, for himselfe and the rest of the Apostles, and all other Preachers of Gods Word, pray for us; and this is, praeceptum breve, leve, & utile; a short request, but one word, pray, you cannot forget it; and it is easie; for the poore may doe it as well as the rich; and as the distich saith,

Æque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aquè.
Æque neglectum pueris, senibusque nocebit;

It

De hac re, est in Biblico codice mentio voluminis cujusdam in quo Sacrata regni jura scripsit Samuel eaque sic in eris tradita in tabernaculo deposuit vide Pet. Cunaeum de republ. Heb. l. 2. c. 14. p. 128.

2 Reg. 19. 4.

Deut. 2. 18.

Iob 42. 8.

2 Reg. 19. 4.

Dan. 2. 18.

Job 42. 8.

It is as good for you that doe it, as it is for us for whom you do it; and the neglecting of it will prejudice you, as much as us: and therefore pray for us. And I find the Apostle requesteth this divers times, therefore no doubt but for divers reasons.

Heb.13.

Three speciall reasons to move us to pray for our Ministers.

First, you should pray for us, because we pray for you, yea, oftētimes when you doe not, & sometimes when you cannot pray for your selves, as Pharaoh sheweth, when hee sent to Moses and Aaron that they should pray for him; and it is peccatum non orandi; a sinne of not praying in us, when we neglect it, as Samuel sheweth, God forbid that I should cease to pray for you, and so sinne against God: and therefore, lege talionis, you are bound to pray for us.

2.Pet.2,12.

Secondly, you should pray for us for the good of your selves; for weake Ministers are the destruction of the people: Ieroboam made all Israel to sinne, because he made Priests of the meaneſt of the people; for if they fall and perish, many perish; because as S. Peter saith, many shall follow their damnable wayes. And if you looke upon all sorts of men, you shall finde that they should be the most absolute of all men in all good parts; for every eye is upon them, therefore the Law required they should be men without blemish, and every man is to bee taught by them, and therefore the Priests lippes should preserve knowledge. Or if you consider all degrees of men, they have all neede of them, and they are necessary unto all, to correct the bad, to confirme the good, to teach the people, and to assist the princes; for who should speake in Sermons, Parliaments, or in any other Assemblies, to preserve pietie, to increase charitie, and to justifie the rights of Princes, and to vindicate the same against the gaine-saying of Corah, but we that are to teach every soule to feare God, to love their neighbours, and to be subject unto the higher powers? And yet we see regale Sacerdotium that royall Priest-hood, which should be upheld by Kings to be assistants unto Kings, to governe Gods people in all pietie and honesty, to become almost vulgare Sacerdotium, a laicke presbyterie of a strange concretion, or a popular Priest-hood full of all prying curiositie and contradiction: but I hope this will serve to shew how behovefull it is, to have wise, discreet, and faithfull Ministers, even for the good of all the people; for like Priest, like people: if wee be ill, wee make many ill; because, as the people of themselves have not any grace to doe good, they know not how to doe it unlesse we teach them; so they have not much wit (though it bee alwayes propense to evill) to doe many evils; quia non nisi ex magnis ingenijs magni errores; because strange plots can never proceede from meane wits; but you see what cruell combustions the bloody-witty Iesuites doe make in all the world, to erect their Popish Monarchie, and what foolish factions our owne giddy-witty Puritan-Priests have made amongst our selves, to bring all things to an anarchie: and therefore for your own sake, you should pray for us that are your teachers, that we may be such as may be good for you; to teach you in all honesty and godlinesse.

Thirdly, you should pray for us, that by your prayers we may be helped to discharge that great charge, which is laid upon us; for we are bound to beare one anothers burden, and to helpe one another in all necessities;

But of all the men in the world, we are in the strangeſt state, and therefore have most need of all assistance; For,

1. Our worke is the greateſt which we are to doe.
1. Our danger is greateſt, whatsoever we doe.

The great charge of preachers.

First, our worke is not collectio pecuniarum, a trading in the world to get wealth, or a hunting after our owne preferment; but it is cura animarum, a charge of soules, the greateſt charge in the world: a burthen saith Moses, yea such a burthen, Angelicis humeris formidandum; as would make Angels shoulders to shrinke, saith Erasmus: and therefore Saint Paul cries out, πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός; Who is sufficient for these things? for we are not onely to Preach in season & out of season, that is, volentibus et nolentibus; to them that are willing, & to them that are unwilling, willing, as Saint Auguſtine expounds it; becauſe that to the willing, it comes in ſeaſon, whenſoever it comes; and to the unwilling it comes out of ſeaſon, come when it will; but we are alſo to be an example of good life unto all others, and to live like Gregorie Nazianzen, qui fecit ea quæ docuit, & ſeipſum minimè condemnavit contraria agendo quam docebat; which did the things that he taught, and did not condemne himſelfe by living contrary to his teaching: The life of Preachers ſhould be a moſt upright and a ſincere life, without all offence; quia inter ſeculares nugæ nugæ, in ore ſacerdotis ſunt blaſphemiæ; becauſe thoſe things which are but triſles or ſmall ſinnes among ſecular men, they are great, and horrible, untolerable ſinnes among the Preachers of Gods Word; nam ibi criminoſior culpa eſt, ubi honeſtior ſtatus; for the more honourable is our calling, the more odious is our offending; and the Lord ſaith, I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me: and therefore what care and what diligence ought we to have to looke to our ſelues, ut nihil ſeditatis in nobis appareat; that we might abſtaine from all appearance of evill, and faſhion not our ſelves in any thing like unto the courſes of this preſent world.

Ruff. in vit. Nazian.
How uprightly we ſhould live.
Bern. l. 2. de conſiderat. ad Eugen.

Levit. 10.

Secondly, as our taske is great which we are to doe, (thus uprightly to live, and moſt faithfully to preach the Word of God) ſo our danger is great whatſoever we doe; for we are betwixt the barke and the tree, betwixt the fire and the water, betwixt the anger of God and the malice of the devill, and as the Poet ſaith, incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charibdim, we ſhall fall into one, doe what we can; For,

In what a dangerous ſtate the Miniſters do live.

First, If we neglect our duties, either in not preaching, or in ill-living, the bloud of the people, beſides living in our ſinnes, ſhall be required at our hands: and therefore, woe is me if I preach not the Goſpell, ſaith the Apoſtle; & væ miſeris qui ſunt catholici prædicando, & hæretici operando, væ qui tenent in memoria quæ non agunt in vita; and woe to thoſe miſerable men which preach well, but live ill, which have Chriſt in their Sermons, but not in their actions, which know and teach others what to doe, but will not doe it themſelues; woe, woe, to thoſe miſerable men, ſaith Saint Bernard; Quia ſatius eſt ſuſtinere pœnam Caipha, Pilati & Herodis, quam pœnam ſacerdotis indignè Miniſtrantis; becauſe it were better to ſuffer the puniſhment of Caiphas, Pilate and Herod, then the puniſhment that is due to an unworthy Miniſter.

The fearfull ſtate of thoſe Miniſters that neglect their duty.

Secondly, If we truely preach the Word of God, and live as uprightly as the Saints of God, yet we ſhall be ſure never to eſcape the cenſures of men, nor the malice of the devill; for though in old time there were counted but ſeven wiſe men (that had that name) among the Greekes, yet now there are not, (in their owne judgements) ſo many fooles amongſt us; and therefore, et garrula anus & delirus ſenex, as Saint Hierome ſaith to Paulinus; Coblers and Tinkers in their ſhoppes will judge what we ſhall ſay in our Pulpits: But if this were all, we could well indure it, but it is not; for as wee ſeeke to deſtroy the Kingdome of darkeneſſe, ſo doth the Prince of darkeneſſe ſeeke by all meanes to deſtroy us; and therefore he ſhooteth all his poyſoned darts at us, he ſtirreth up the hearts of wicked men to trample us under feete, as the mire in the ſtreete, to doe us all the miſchiefe that lyeth in them, and to deale with us as their Fathers uſed the Prophets, and as we read of them in the ſecond of Wiſedome 10. &c. ſaying, come, Let us lye in waite for the righteous, let us ſee if their words be true, let us examine them with deſpitefulneſſe and torture, that we may know their meekeneſſe, and prove their patience; for they be not for our turne, we have no benefit by them, but they upbraid us with our offending of the Law, and object to our infamie the tranſgreſſion of our education, yea, they reprove our thoughts, and their life is not like other men, but their waies are of another faſhion, eſteeming us as counterfeits, and abſtaining from our waies as from filthineſſe, and therefore, ſeeing they are ſo grievous unto us, even to behold, let us ſee if their words be true, and let us joyne our ſelues againſt them; as againſt our mortall enemies: thus doe they conſult, thus doe they combine themſelues as againſt all righteous men, ſo ſpecially againſt the Preachers of Gods Word, and the reprovers of their faults: O then, beloved brethren, Tincta Pœanibus ſanguine tela dabis, Ovid in Ibin.

Wiſ. 2. 10, 12.

what created power is able to undoe this covenant of hell it selfe, when subtilty and cruelty, the world, and the divell, like Simeon and Levi, that were brethren in evill, have combined together to overthrow us? surely God who is Θεὸς παρὸν μικρον, Deus in opportunitatibus; a God in the needfull time of trouble (as Simplicius calls him) must be our helper and defender, or else we shall be soone consumed and brought to nothing; for we are weake to resist, and our enemies strong to oppresse, and all our hearers, our owne people, of whom we should receive most comfort, are either mockers and scoffers of us, or at least judges of us, who, and when we doe ill and when we doe well; rather then helpers of us by their prayers, that we may doe well; and therefore we see how many of us are: one man learned without discretion; another worldly wise but cannot preach, a third preacheth well, but liveth ill; and in briefe, most of us defective of what we should bee: and all this turneth to the hurt of all men.

And therefore that we may be as we ought to be, good for our selues, good for you all, you see how necessary it is that you should pray for us, and especially.

First, that evill and licentious Ministers might have grace, for their amendment, or the censure of ejectment out of the Church, as Adam was out of Paradise: some indeed had rather cover their faults then cure them, lest the revealing of their vices might be a cause of reviling their fellowes; but alas had it beene more credit for the Apostles to have had Judas still retayned or excluded? I trow excluded: and therefore he lost his dignity; to teach us that all such false stewards should heare the same sentence, Episcopatum tuum accipiet alter; let another take this place, for a little leaven will leaven the whole lumpe; and one lewd man may doe much mischiefe; and therefore as our Saviour drove the buyers and sellers out of the Temple; so should all buyers and sellers of the Church of Christ, all factious and contentious Preachers, and all loose and lewd livers, be delivered unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Iesus; and that all the leaven of iniquity may be purged from the Ministery. And,

Secondly, that God would not suffer the world to condemne the righteous with the wicked, nor to accuse all for the offence of some, but as the Poet saith in another kinde,

Parcite paucarum diffundere crimen in omnes
Spectetur meritis quaq; puella suis;

So in this; that they onely should be blamed which are blame-worthy; or if they will still persecute us, that neither Satan with all his cruelties, nor yet the world with all his subtilties may deject the minds of worthy and godly Ministers, but that in all afflictions and contempts, they may say with the Prophet David, Why art thou so heavy, O my soule, and why art thou so disquieted within me? yet put thy trust in the Lord, for he is thy helper and defender; and that they may goe on in the course of godlinesse like the two Cowes which carried the Arke, which went on straight forward without turning to either hand: and like King Therons Coursers, that were never weary of running; that so they may escape all the fiery darts of Satan, and finish their course with joy, when they shall receive that Crowne of righteousnesse which the Lord hath prepared for them that love him.

Pyndarus.

And thus dearely beloved, you see that although man for his sinne, was ejected out of Paradise, and subjected to all miseries, yet through the mercy of God, in sending his Sonne to be made man to suffer for man, to overcome the divell, sinne, and death, to raise himselfe from death, to ascend to Heaven, to send his holy Spirit to fill our hearts with his heavenly graces, we shall, (if we beleeve in him, and serve him, praise his Name for all his blessings, love one another, and pray one for another,) attaine unto everlasting happines: Vnto the which happines, the Lord of his goodnes bring us all, through Iesus Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be ascribed, as is most due, all Glory and Honour, and Praise, and Thankes, and Power, and Majesty, and Dominion, both now and for evermore. Amen.

A Prayer.

A PRAYER.

O Eternall God, and our moſt gratious Father, we moſt humbly beſeech thee for Ieſus Chriſt his ſake, to forgive us all our ſinnes, which we acknowledge and confeſſe to be more in number then the ſands of the Sea, which cannot be numbred; cleanſe us O Lord with the bloud of Chriſt, and plant in us thoſe heavenly gifts and graces whereby we may be inabled to ſerve thee as we ought to doe, in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our life; increaſe our faith, ſtirre up our hope, and kindle our love, and our charity both towards thy ſelfe and all men for thy ſake; give us patience to undergoe, without offending thee, whatſoever miſeries this wicked world ſhall any wayes heape upon us: bleſſe our gracious King, the Prince, and all the royall iſſue; bleſſe all the Miniſters of thy Church, and all the Magiſtrates of this Common-wealth: Grant O Lord, thy grace unto thy Miniſters, that they may faithfully preach the Word of truth, and ſincerely live a moſt upright, and a godly life; grant to the Magiſtrates thy grace O God, to defend right without remiſſeneſſe, and to puniſh vice without maliciouſneſſe; and becauſe we are all thy creatures, the workes of thy hands, made by thee, preſerved by thee, and injoying all we have, life and livelihood, from thee; O Lord be merciſull unto us all, and remember that we are but duſt; conſider, O conſider that we are but as graſſe, not able to doe what we would, not able to doe any thing that is good, unleſſe thou doſt it in us: O then let our ſoules live, and we will praiſe thy Name, we will magnifie thee for ever and ever, for all the bleſſings that we have received from the, our Creation, Redemption, Sanctification, Preſervation, and our aſſured hope of Glorification, and all other graces whatſoever, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

A Soliloquie of the Author.

O Eternall God, thou haſt created me, and I have offended thee; thou haſt redeemed me, and I ſtill continued unthankefull unto thee; and yet thou haſt heaped many bleſſings upon me, and given me grace to be deſirous to ſerve thee, and according to my poore and weake ability, to ſhew forth theſe lights unto thy Church; I confeſſe, O Lord, whatſoever is ill herein is onely mine, and whatſoever is good is truely thine; and therefore I deſire thee to pardon mine evill, and to make me thankefull for thy good, and ſo to accept that worke done by thy grace, that it may be crowned with thy glory. I doe not long for any worldly thing, the whole world lyeth in wickedneſſe, but I deſire my ſoule may be married unto thee, to live with thee for evermore: and therefore O bleſſed God, ſeeing that as I have none in heaven, ſo, I have none in earth but onely thou to be my helper, I beſeech thee to be my redeeming kinſman, to preſerve my wearied body from the malice of this world, and to preferre my diſconſolate ſoule unto everlaſting joyes, through Ieſus Chriſt mine onely Saviour.

Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

FINIS.

AN ALPHABETICALL INDEX.

Ab.

Abſtaine from ſin is from God, 730. God never abſolveth unrepentant ſinners, 751.

Abaylardus his waywardneſſe, 404.

Ability to do good wholly loſt, 155.

Our abilities better known to God than to our ſelves, 133.

Abſurdities God ſhunneth in all things, 804. Abſurdities of the Lutheran doctrine touching the communication of properties, 838, &c. Abſurdities following the high Prieſts ſaying, that the Diſciples ſtole Chriſt away, 985. Abſurdities of the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation, 710.

Able, nature is not able to ſhew the reaſon how the world ſhould be made, 686. God able to do what he will, 691. To hinder what he will not have done, 692. And to doe then hee did, or doth, or will doe, 692. 693. Phraſes of being able or not able, how to be underſtood, 699 God able to produce any thing of nothing, 702. Able to forgive all ſinnes, 703. Not able to do contrary to what he decreed, nor able to do things contrary to his nature, ibid. None able to know God as he is in himſelfe, 674.

Gods ability to helpe us, a great comfort to the godly, 712. His ability to ſave us without the incarnation of his Sonne, 801.

Abſtract names of all excellencies moſt proper unto God, 676.

Abuſe of Chriſt not paralel'd in any age, 908.

Ac.

Accepter of perſons what it is, 733.

Acceptable, what it is, 44.

Accuſation of Chriſt fivefold, 365. How falſe it was, 366, 905. Whereof accuſed before Pilate, and how falſe thoſe accuſations were, 906.

Achſa's myſtery diſcloſed, 319.

Acknowledge whence we have all our goodneſſe, 733.

Actions to be examined, 80. The good actions of naturall men and Chriſtian men differ in three reſpects, 195. How good or evill in reſpect of the manner and end, 523. Inward actions of God ever in doing, neceſſary, incommunicable, 775. All our actions ſhould tend to Gods glory, 445. All actions adjudged according to the diſpoſition of the will, 617. Gods free actions not curiouſly to be ſearched into, 555.

One act takes not away the habit of any vertue, 202. Acts meerly involuntary, 589, 606. Act of puniſhment leaſt agreeable to Gods nature, 724. No act can exceed the power of the agent, 732. Chiefeſt acts of David types of Chriſt, 617. Act ſinfull how aſcribed to God, the divell, and to man, 523.

Actors in the tragedy of Chriſt his paſſion, who they were, 866.

Actuall ſin, what it is, 583.

Ad.

Adam and all his ſonnes why ſuffered to fall, 522. Adam ſinning we all ſinned, 568. Adams fall brought upon us a twofold evill, ibid. How ſmall was the communion that God gave unto Adam, 550.

Adamant how mollified, 943.

Adverſity the mother of teares, 317. in adverſity ſome ſerve God the better, and they are the beſt men, 398. Adverſity makes the Saints more reſplendent than proſperity, 721. Adverſity and afflictions not ſimply good, ibid.

Æ.

Æſculus, how he came by his death,

Aff.

Affections of Chriſt how they differ from ours in three reſpects, 890.

Affirmative precepts how many, 744.

Afflictions of Gods ſervants how tempered, 134. They drive us to God, 151. They are like fire, 172. Why God ſends them, ibid. What they do, 177. The afflictions of others our inſtructions, 180. The afflictions of the Church, 436. Afflictions drive many from God, 260. How to behave our ſelves in them, 512. To looke for them, conſider whence they come, and why they are ſent, ibid. They are good in three things, 524. They are like phyſicall potions, ibid. Afflictions not to be made to our ſelves, ibid. God the chiefe Authour of them, ibid.

Afflicted men some way comforted, 205.
Agamemnons picture how drawn, 333.

Ag.

Ages of the world, 852, 853.
Agents, three sorts of them, 702.
Age of man divided into foure parts, 627. Christ borne in the first age of the world, and why, 853.
Agony of Christ, what was the cause thereof, 890.

Al.

Alcestes, how dearely she loved her husband, 858.
Alexanders curtesie, 82.
All why God will have or none, 223. All-sufficiency of God, 516. All that we have is from God, 687. All men tast of Gods goodnesse, 728. All men how said to hate the Preachers, 874. All taken three wayes, 430. Why Christ died for all, 431. In what sense he is given for all, ibid.

Am.

Ambition the cause of schismes, 403. the ambition of the Church, 437.
S. Ambrose proceeded not so farre against Theodosius, as the Puritans do against their Kings, 388. His errour, 555.

An.

Anabaptists heresie what it is, 819.
Ancestors not to be followed in their errors and corruptions, 128.
Angels for three things most excellent, 966 Appeared like men, but were never made men, 965. Alwaies served Christ, 966. Punished the wicked, 966, &c. Comforted the women, and how, 968. Testified the resurrection of Christ, 986. And the birth of Christ, 858. Angell a name of office, and Christ often called an Angell, 807. Angels how said to ascend, 1012. Angell cannot beget another, 569. How immutable, 276.
Anselmus what he said, 824.
Anger, what evill it doth, 743. Our anger how implacable it is, 284.
Angry when to be, 104. Not suddenly, ibid. Anger twofold, 825.
Annointed how Iesus was, 548. A twofold annointing, ibid. Christ not annointed with any materiall oyle, 548. To what end he was annointed, 549. How many sorts of men were annointed, ibid. How all Christians are annointed, 557.

Ap.

Apollonians why they nourished sheep, 255
Apelles his heresie, 819.
Apostles only filled with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, 1053. Apostles words, He is the first borne of every creature, how understood, 784.
Appian, what he did, 402.
Application of Christs resurrection is the onely thing which helpeth us, 997.
Apostacy what a fearfull sin, 1000.
Approve sin in others what a great sin it is, 596.
Apollodorus what he dreamed, 618.
Apparition of Christ in the shape of a man before he was made man, manifold, 807. He appeared like a man unto Adam, ibid. To Abraham, ibid. To Iacob and Ieshua, 812. He appeared to the Patriarchs in a true body, 820. He appeared like a sinfull man, but without sin, 820. How he appeared to S. Paul going to Damascus, 844. He appeared twelve times at least after his resurrection, 986. Why to Mary Magdalen first, 986, &c. And why to S. Peter first among the men, 988. And why he appeared to S. Iames, 990, &c.
Apollinaris and some Arrians heresies, 819, 821.
Appearance and shew of truth how vaine it is, 734.
Approbation of sin how evill it is, 589.
Apineese to receive grace is from God, 516.
Apuleius his asse what she said, 647.

Ar.

Argue from Gods power without testimony of his will not good, 709.
Army of God twofold, 494. His celestiall army threefold, ibid. His terrestriall army, 495.
Armour of a Christian of two kinds, 1097.
Aristippus his discourse with Æschines, 506.
Archidamus his witty device to make peace, 506.
Arrius his heresie and objections answered, 786 &c.
Arrians, whether they corrupted the text of Salomon, God created me, &c 782.
Arrogancy of Iudas seen, 900.

As.

To ascend man was made by God, 983, &c.
Christ ascended three times. 1016.
Time, place, and manner of Christ his ascention, 1020.
Christ ascended above all heavens, 1023.
Our ascention to heaven depends upon our union with Christ, 1023.
Doctrine of Christs ascention to what end it serveth, 1024.
That we should alwaies ascend to heaven, 1025.
Our wings to ascend what they be. 1026.
Christ ascended for four speciall ends, 1060
Christ before his ascention would not bestow the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and why, 1031. There be foure sorts of ascenders, 1013
Angels how they ascend, ibid.
Ash tree, the properties of it, 113.
Christ whether wholly destitute of all assistance from the Godhead, 892.
Assurance of salvation three wayes confirmed, 306.

Christ assumed our flesh,833.

Al.

Atheists denie the power of God,685. Reproved,277. Worse then divels,278.
Attention praised,139.

Au.

Author of induration is not God, 180. God the author of both Testaments,70. of all grace,516. and of every kinde of peace,518. &c. God not the author of evill, 521. nor of sin,ibid. nor properly of any punishment, 523. he is the author of all goodnesse,525. First author of our conversion to God is God,993 the authors counsell against Innovators, 11. His exposition upon 1 *Tim.*1.15.52. His sufferings, 53 His opinion of Christ his love to S. Iohn, 204. His resolution,216. His wish for himselfe and others,308. His resolution,353. What hee thinkes some lawes have done,413. His faith,546. His resolution,417. What he thinketh of Transubstantiation, 977. S. Augustine his error when he was young, 233. His good prayer,35. Reading the death of Dido, what he said,615. Christ borne in the raigne of Augustus,853. Disparagement to Augustus to joyne any other with him,942. His judgement of his two daughters,81.

Ba.

Backe-parts of God what it signifieth, 667.
Baalam prophesied of Christ,858.
Backesliding,205.

Be.

Beatitudes of the body, 159. of the soule, 160.
Behold hath a treble use in Scripture, 139.
Beholders three sorts;140.
Being of God not safe to search too far into it,678.
Being of all creatures given by God,679.
Beard of Christ who they be,557.
In a golden Bell two things,459.
Belisarius his misery,297.
Beauty of God incomprehensible.722.
Why we Beleeve not the assertions of the Iesuites,711 to beleeve in Christ is to eate him and to drinke him,238. What it is, 272. Not to beleeve in him how haynous,310. To beleeve in him worketh our peace with God, 499.
We are Begotten to God by the truth,736. The Father alwaies begetteth the sonne,775. Christ made the beginning of our waies,782.
Benefits of Christs incarnation,828. Benefits of the union of the two natures of Christ, in respect of Christ,841. In respect of us,845. Gods benefits recommended to our memories, 621. Benefits how many Christ bestowed on Iudas.898. Every benefit requires a duty,972. To benefit by Gods Word three things necessary,154.
Best men fare worse,260. most hated in the world and most pressed.333. 874.
Bethlehem the place where Christ was borne,856.
Christ why Betrayed by Iudas,899.

Bi.

Birds flying hardly catched,587.
Birth of Christ how meane it was and why, 857. Why first revealed to the shepheards, 859.
Bishops and Priests to live more strictly then all others,540. Many Bishops have done very good service to the Church.400.

Bl.

How Blinde sinners be,620. Our Blindnesse seene and confessed by the Philosophers,ibid A tale of a blinde widdow,ibid.
Blood of Christ shed sixe speciall times,702 His blood is the price that was paid for all men, 940,941. Shedding of mans blood what a heinous sin,750.

Bo.

Our Bodies regarded more then our soules, 532. Bodies cannot beget soules,569,570. Christ had a true body proved,818.&c. All the Objections made to the contrary answered, 819.&c. A naturall body must be locall, 696. Body of Christ cannot be every where, 698. How it may bee said to bee every where,705. To be a true body, and to bee every where is meerely contradictory,706. Bodies glorified have their dimensions,707. Body of Christ glorified from the first moment of his conception,707. Still a physicall body,ibid. For a body to be in one place & in many places at the same time is impossible,710.&c. We may not refer that to the body which is spoken of the whole person of Christ,819. Christ appeared to the Patriarchs in a true body,820. Body of Christ how said to doe divine operations,973. How it may be truly said to be in the Sacraments, 977.
Bodies raised at the Resurrection of Christ, testified his Resurrection,992.
Bodies in heaven shall be still quantative, 707.
What a Bondage it is to serve sin, 651.
A threefold Booke to know God,305.
Bookes set forth what an excellent good, 172.
Christ why borne in the raigne of Augustus and Herod,853. Why borne in December, 854. Why borne upon the Sabbath day, 855 Why presently after midnight, 855. Why borne of a woman,813. And why of a Virgin, 814.
Bounty of Mary Magdalen and of Cresus,321
Bounty of Christ,543,544.
A Bountifull man is gratious,723. God most bountifull to all people,723.
God is not Bound to give power to the wicked to serve him,733.
Bow and sword the chiefest instruments of war,and what they signifie,2.

Bowes how many have, and what each bowe signifieth. 4. Bow of the the Sunne and of the Moone and their difference, 5, 6.

Br.

Bread choſen in the Sacrament for three reaſons, 237. The ſubſtance of it ſtill remaining, 237. How differenced from other bread in three reſpects, ibid.

Gods Breakefaſt what it is, 233.

River Brechos properties, 318.

Brethren how deerely they loved each other, 540. Bretbren proveth not all men equall, ibid. Bretbren how variouſly taken, 1075.

Brother-hood in reſpect of the ſpirit greater then that which is in reſpect of fleſh & blood, 1075. Gentile bretl ren how deerely they loved one another, 1075. &c.

Bruno the inſtituter of the Carthuſian order, 61.

Bu.

Burden of Chriſt, 126. Foure ſorts of burdens ibid. The burden of the ſonnes of Adam what it is, 126. Burdens not perceived, 129. Burden of hard Lords. Burden of Chriſt what it ſignifieth, ibid Burden of Chriſtians how light in compariſon of the burden of the Iewes, 129. Of a eleven ſpeciall burdens, 127, 128. Burden twofold, 131. Burden of Chriſt how heavier then the law, 132. Made light by foure things, ibid. And extended by foure conſiderations, 134.

Burying place of Moſes why the divell would reveale, 313.

Builders two ſorts, 291. Sixe ſorts of fooliſh builders, 293. The greatneſſe of their folly, 299, 300.

Ca.

Canaan given to the Iſraelites a type of giving heaven to us, 680.

All Called by Chriſt, 72. Called to many things, ibid. Called three waies, ibid. Every man called, 73. Calling twofold. 74 449. The quality of the called, 75. Chriſts calling the effects of it, 326. Every man ought to bee of ſome calling, 449. Of a lawfull calling 450. No bleſſing in an unlawfull calling, ibid Calling to ſalvation twofold, ibid. God calleth effectually none but the elect, 729. Three effects of effectuall calling, 450. God calleth us divers waies, 451. Outward calling in vaine without the inward, ibid. Effectuall calling what it is, 452. Five points handled about inward calling, 452. The helpes to procure this grace, 454.

No man naturally more Capable to be called then another, 453.

Canonization of Saints when it began, 457.

Canonicall howres when firſt inſtituted, 458

Care of Chriſt over his followers, 217. Diſtruſtfull care what it doth, 538. Care of worldlings, 556.

Carping at preachers how evill, 171.

Cartwright and his followers, 11.

Carthuſian order by whom inſtituted, 61.

Cato why he laughed, 159.

Cauſes of the Rainebow, 3. Cauſes of contention, 503. Cauſe of Chriſts death ſhewed for three reaſons, 384 Cauſes of our ſalvation, 22. Cauſes of Schiſmes, 403. The cauſe of our deſtruction is our not repenting 187. Inſtrumentally manifold, 930. Efficient God himſelfe and why, 437. Cauſes of Chriſts ſufferings, 936. &c. Finall, 940. God is not the cauſe why the wicked ſerve not God, 733.

Ce.

Celidonian ſtone two kindes of it, 112.

Ceremonies, 129, 130.

Cerinthus his hereſie, 836.

Certainty of ſalvation how to bee attained, 25.

Ch.

Changed ſubſtance cannot bee what it was and what it is both at once, 709. God can change any ſubſtance into another, ibid.

Chance nothing commeth by it, 518.

Character of the Miniſters indelible, 547. Character of an humble man, 114.

Charity of S Peter, 202. Charity what it is, 283. Proper to the elect and the excellencie of it, ibid. Taken two waies, ibid. How expreſſed by the antients, 284. Greater then faith in three reſpects, 287. That it cannot iuſtifie us, 288. Some offices thereof remaine in heaven, and ſome not, 289.

Cheere what Chriſt looketh for, 158.

Children good or evill; 33. Children manifold evill, 126. alwaies in action, 123. How deerely they ſhould love their parents, 539 not to be carefull for them, 127. how they are to be inſtructed, 502 Children liable to death, 580 they are tainted with ſin before they are borne ibid. Child-hood and the myſteries thereof deſcribed, 627. our children to bee maried to the godlieſt men, 657. how it ſtands with Gods juſtice to puniſh the Fathers ſins upon the childrē, 753. the wicked ſhall be puniſhed in their children, 753. Children very apt to imitate their Parents, 754. all the children of the wicked not puniſhed for their parents ſins, 755. a childe how conceived in the wombe, 815.

Choſen we are, not for any previſed goodneſſe, 441 God chooſeth no man in reſpect of any thing that is in man, 733.

Chriſt how baſely uſed by us, 32. why incarnate, ibid. Chriſt the Word the ſumme of all things, 763. ſignified by all the moſt memorable things of the Old Teſtament, 763. Chriſt would not reveale himſelfe to the world all at once, 763. To know him is the onely thing that makes us happy, 764. Chriſt deſpiſed all vanities, 764. ſuffered all miſeries, 765. Chriſt the moſt perfect patterne of all vertue, 765. Chriſt knowne ſuppreſſeth all vices, 765. Hee alone is all-ſufficient to ſupply all our neede, 766. Without Chriſt the whole world will availe us nothing, 766. Chriſt only ſhould be preached by all preachers, 768. The name of Chriſt ſhould be alwaies in our mouthes to be honoured, not to be blaſphemed, 769. Chriſt in the Father, not as we are in the Father, 772.

Christ a true God proved,777.&c Christ is truly rich,779. Christ created all things and governeth all things, 779. &c. Christ prayed unto, 780. Christ began to be a God existing in the Manhood, when he was made flesh, 780 Christ no accidentall, but an essentiall word, 780. Christ how he may be said to be created and begotten, 783. Christ made the beginning of our waies, 782. Christ demands the earth as man and giveth heaven as God, 784. Christ how the first begotten, and how the onely begotten Sonne of God, 784. Christ how God of himselfe, 785 &c How said to be with God and in God, 788. Christ equall to the Father, 789. Christ after what manner conceived, 814. not of the essence, but by the vertue of the Holy Ghost, 814 Christ conceived a perfect man in the first moment of his conception, 815. How wonderfully he was made man, 815. Christ why conceived of a Virgin, 816. how hee commeth from Adam, 816. Christ made a perfect man, 817. That he had a true body, 818. &c. Christ made subject to all humane frailties, 813. Christ how hee hath performed all things for us, 828. Christ an infallible patterne for all men to imitate, 828. Christ brought us more good then we lost in Adam. 829. Christ how made invisible unto the Ievves, 843. &c. Christ how hee came in, the doores being shut, 844 How hee walked upon the seas, 844. How he appeared to S. Paul, 844 Christ came from Nathan, and not from Salomon, 850. Christ why borne in the raigne of Augustus, 853. Why in the sixt age of the world, 853 Why in December, 854. Christ what manner of Person he was. 872. That he was a man, 871 A just man, 871. A good man, 872. A King, a Priest, a Prophet, 872. A true and eternall God, 873. Christ his sufferings expressed, 875. His whole life a continuall suffering, 875. Christs sufferings chiefly in three places, 876. Christ suffered in soule, 876. Christs first degree of suffering in being made passible, 876. Christs sufferings most admirable, 877. Christ why he went out to bee taken, 877. Why out of the Cittie, 887. &c. Why into the Garden, 888. Christ whether wholly destitute of all divine assistance, 892. How lightly he esteemed of death, 891. Christ how by his death he overcame death, 640. Christ delivered from what he feared, 892. Christ to undergoe the punishment of all others, 892. Christ how he sought to reclaime Iudas, 901. Christ how handled presently after he was taken, 902. &c. Christ why hee chose Iudas to be his Apostle, 898. Christ how crowned with thornes, 909. Christ why he came not downe from the Crosse, 913. Christ dead, is still persecuted and raged at, 914. Christ how said to be every where, 944. Christ no where to bee found but in the Church, 973. &c. Christ most severe to the wicked, 543. Most gentle to the godly, ibid. Most pittifull to the poore, ibid. And most liberall to all, ibid. Suffered for us, fulfilled all righteousnesse for us, 545. He is our sole and perfect Saviour, 546. How he was in the loynes of Abraham. 552. A Priest, 551. And why, 552, 553. Annointed to be a King, 555. Christ the soule of our soules, 156. His image in us what it is, 157. The fountaine of all goodnesse, 157. How he commeth to us, 156. What he receiveth from us, 158. What hee bestoweth upon us, 159. How courteous, easie to remit offences, and how bountifull to his servants, 227. Resembled to a bridegroome, 230. Christ a rocke in three respects, 304. A true Nazarite, 356. How he ruleth his Church, 360 Ruleth all things, 359. Christ the Messiah and the true Iehova, 372. His speech to the godly at the last day, 418. His death of sufficient merit to save all men, 427. That he died for all men, 430. What he suffered, 440. He came to bring grace and peace to us, 526. Christ why called Lord and not God in many places, 527. Made a fourefold salve to us, 533. A Lord by a threefold right, 542. Christians defended by Kings and Priests, 370. Christians are Saints in a threefold respect, 460. How holy in their life, ibid. More afflicted then any other, 512. They are Kings, Priests, and Prophets, 558.

Church like heaven in five respects, 231. Our church how Orthodoxall, 246. Church how persecuted, 301. A mingled congregation, 435 Her stormes, 436, 437. Why suffered to be robbed, 460. Not to be forsaken upon the pretended corruption of it, 462. Church the fittest place for publique prayers, 1087. How to rule her children, 956. How subject to afflictions, 957. Church robbers how punished, 415.

Circumstances aggravate sin, 357.

Cl.

Clergy that are chiefe how they deale with their inferiours, 510.

Clytorian well what it effecteth, 961.

Cloathing Christ in white what it signified, 907.

Co.

Commanders that were heroicke what they did, 215.

Comming of Christ threefold, 47. 208. To come to Christ what it signifieth, 82. Comming of Christ to judgement how fearefull, 12. Two signes of Christ his comming to us, 208. Commers to Christ, divers sorts, 87. What they must do, 244 Commers foure sorts of them and their ends, 156. 164. Comming of Christ two waies, 156. And what is meant by it, 165. Six things to be considered about it, 165, 166.

Commandements fulfilled two waies, 130. Made heavie by our carnall desires, 133. To whom hard, 137. Things commmanded that we can not do, and why, 426.

Comfort of a Christian the chiefest, 50. Comfort the least denied in hell, 642. Comforts that we have from Christ his being subject to infirmities, 829.

Whatsoever God Commandeth is no sin, 703

God Compelleth not his servants to doe good, 963. To compell others to sin the practise of most wicked men, 596.

Comming of Christ to judgement, the manner of it, 1021.

Commandements of God, few, short, light, and profitable, 650. &c.

Comfort, the least jot denied in hell, 642.

What communicates most goodnesse unto others, is ever best, 726.

Compassionate our brethrens miseries, 317.

Conception of Christ ineffable, 814.

Condemnation of all the infidels that would not believe in Christ much grieved Christ, 896.

Confession of sins to God, to men, 190, 191. The divell came with a lewd fellow to confession, 190. Confession of Iudas how remarkable, 191. Confession of faith a fruit of Gods Spirit, 476. That we should confesse our sins, 660.

Conceive we can but the least part of Gods excellency, 667.

Conceale some things why God doth, 314.

Condemne none before his cause be heard, 363.

Conquest of Christ over Satan how, 995.

Conscience of wicked men how fearefull, 495. Foure kinds of consciences, 497. The more senslesse our conscience, the more dangerous our state, ibid. Good conscience whence it springeth, 498. Our conscience will either comfort us or torment us continually, 511. Conscience of the wicked opened before they die, 638.

Consideration of S. Augustine excellent, 615.

Consultation in heaven about the restitution of man, 801.

Consideration of Christ his sufferings most admirable, 877.

Constancy most requisite for Preachers, 1032. Constancy of Christ, 311. Of constancy, 391. Constancy of Pilate, ibid. Constancy of God, 393. Of the creatures, ibid. Of the Heathens, ibid. Of the Saints, 394. Of the old Testament and of the new Testament, of Ignatius, of the Martyrs, 394. The reward of it, 395. How constant we should be, 395. Many constant in uncleannesse, 411. in deceit, in covetousnesse, in dissention, in oathes, in sacriledge, 412, &c. in our opinions and errours, 416.

Of counsels and counsellours, 1043. Necessity of good counsell, ibid. Diversity of counsels, ibid. Foure properties of a good counsellour, 1044. Counsell of God twofold, 1045. Good counsels how to be obtained, 1046

Contention, the causes of it, 501.

Contentment not in this life, 348. What an excellent gift, 513.

Contention and law-suits betwixt Ministers and people to be shunned, 422.

Corporall presence of Christ no where now but in heaven, 974.

Christ not corporally present in any secrets, 975.

Correction an argument of Gods love, 397. To be given to children, 537. How burdensome to them, 627.

Conversion to God not to be deferred, 595.

Conversion of any one not to be despaired of, 565.

Conversion of a sinner wrought by God, 963.

Contempt of vanities most requisite for Preachers, 1052.

Contentednesse requisite in any state, 858.

Contrary to the nature of God what things are, 695. God worketh one contrary out of another, 823.

Contradictories how they destroy each other, 695. That God cannot do contradictories, proved, 696.

No cost to be spared to get truth, 736.

Colours of the raine-bow, 8. colours used by the ancients to expresse diverse things, 907.

Covenant with hell should be broken, 596. covenant of God with Noah, what it was, 15. covenants of God compared, 16.

Covetousnesse, 411. Why called the root of evill, 18, 412. The cause of schismes, 403. An enemy to peace, 505. What a horrible sinne, 899. To be avoided, 1084.

Counsell of Crates, 505. Whose counsell we follow, we make our selves their children, 534.

Cr.

Creation adds nothing to Gods perfection, 26.

Creatures, foure sorts of them holy, 457. Not to be abused, 442. They warre against the wicked, 494. They have many impressions of Gods goodnesse infixed in them, 762. How inriched with good, 728. No creature capable of infinitenesse or of infinite perfections, 697. creatures irrationall why destroyed 9.

Crosses, 94. Not to be made to our selves, ibid. To be patiently borne, ibid.

Crying sins foure, 606, 412.

Crœsus his bounty to the Oracle of Apollo, 321.

Cruelty of Marius and Sylla, 434.

Cruelty of Satan against the Preachers, 1035.

Cu.

Cup which Christ drank of, killed him, but overcame him not, 892. cup that Christ was to drink, what it was, 890.

Curiosity of Alexander, 82. curiosity to be shunned in searching out the manner of divine mysteries, 776. To be avoided in searching what God is, 677, 678. curiosity of S. Peter reproved, 206. In whom reproved, 213, 214. The cause of contention, 504.

Custome makes all things easie, 137. custome of sinning makes the sinner bold to sin, 593. It makes the greatest sins seeme no sins, ibid. It bindeth us in sinne, ibid. It indammageth the soule, 594. And it makes the sinners almost incurable, 624.

Cy.

Cypresse tree, the goodnesse of it, 43.

Da.

David and Peter loſt not all grace, 485. What David loſt by his ſin, ibid. Davids words, This day have I begotten thee, how to be underſtood, 783, &c.

Dangerous to reprove great men, 745. Who are moſt ſubject to dangers, 874.

Daughters of ſin are two. 639.

In the day of Chriſts nativity three things obſervable, 854.

Dammage received by Adam twofold, 568.

What a danger it is to neglect publike prayers, 1087.

De.

Death the fruit of ſin, 565. By death is ſignified all that is under the curſe of God, 613, 625. Death threefold, 614. death of the ſoul threefold, 616. death what it is, 625. How largely it extendeth it ſelfe, 634 How unreſiſtible it is, 635. How expreſſed by the Egyptians, ibid. How it ſhortens life diverſe waies, 636. How it taketh men of all ages, 637. Smiteth in every place, ibid.

The dead are the beſt inſtructors, 97.

Seven deadly ſins, 606.

Death how comfortable to the godly, 637. How terrible to the wicked. 638. How it equalizeth the bodies of all men, ibid death eternall what it is, 641. death of Chriſt accidentally the cauſe of much evill to many, 383. Of ſufficient merit to ſave all men, 427. The end of it twofold, 432. The ſole cauſe that maketh our death happy unto us, 640. A ſufficient ſatisfaction for the greateſt ſinnes, 702. The death of Chriſt cleanſeth all ſinne, 315. death, how little Chriſt reſpected it, 891. Saints at their death ſupported by God, 891, &c. death of the croſſe grievous in foure reſpects, 912. death of Chriſt maketh the wicked without excuſe, 942. Certainty of Chriſts death ſhewed in that he roſe not till the third day, 981. death of Chriſt aſcribed to many, and how, 174. Sudden death how accounted a bleſſing, 182. How to be prayed againſt, ibid. No death ſudden to the godly, ibid. death cauſed by ſin, 183. Meditation of death what it doth, 134.

The decrees of God how brought to paſſe, 16.

Decree of reprobation, what it is, 427.

Deceived two ſorts of men, 61.

Deceit of ſin how great, 611. Deceits are no deceits unleſſe they be cunningly carried, 900.

Dedication of Temples how firſt aſcribed to the Saints, 457. All things dedicated to Gods ſervice are holy, 465.

Delay in Gods ſervice how dangerous, 205.

Not to delight in our owne works, 122. Delight in wickednes hinders us from Chriſt, 79.

God deludeth no man, 426.

Delight in ſin maketh us exceeding ſinfull, 589. All not delighted with the ſame things, 467.

Three demaunds made and anſwered, 406.

Democritus and Heraclitus practice, 159.

Demodocus what he ſaid of the Mileſians, 141.

Demoſthenes his anſwer for his flight, 331. A good ſaying of his, 532. His parable unto the Athenians of the wolves requeſt unto the ſheep, 1035. Of a young man that hired an aſſe to Megara, 1065.

Deformity of ſin greater than we can comprehend, 652.

Deferring of Chriſts ſufferings grieved Chriſt, 894.

Five degrees of ſinning, 485.

Wicked men how they deceive themſelves, 955.

Debters bound to pay, though they have nothing, 155. God a debter to no man, 964.

To defend the truth with the hazard of all that we have, 737.

Why God deferreth to give us what we deſire, 1094.

Our deliverances from puniſhment to be aſcribed to Gods goodneſſe, 730. God deliver-eth not alwaies his deareſt Saints from afflictions, 731. Chriſt delivered from what he feared, 892.

To derogate from Gods power how great a ſin, 701.

God denieth his grace unto the children for their fathers ſinnes, and why, 756, 757.

Why God denieth what we ask, 1094.

To deſcend from the croſſe eaſier than to riſe from the grave, 984.

Deſcention of Chriſt into hell handled, 994, &c. Proved by Scripture, and by the teſtimony of antiquity, 996, 1018. That Chriſt deſcended before he could aſcend, 1018. Why Chriſt deſcended not from the Croſſe, 913. Deſcending of Chriſt ſignifieth the aſſuming of our fleſh, 750.

Deſcription of a wicked kingdome, 509. deſcription of God by way of negation, affirmation and ſupereminency, 675.

No deſert in us that God ſhould love us, 26.

Deſire of Pilate to ſave Chriſt, 364. deſire of war what ſigne, 507. deſire to ſin is an act done, 649. Saints deſired nothing but Chriſt, 667.

To deſpaire of no mans converſion, 905. Never to deſpaire of mercy, 742. To deſpaire, what a hainous ſin, 206, 743.

Determined things not to be queſtioned, 402.

Higheſt ſtraine of devotion, 456.

Devices of men to ſatisfie for ſins, 545.

Dew of Hermon, how it fell on mount Sion, 555.

Deity of Chriſt proved, 526.

Di.

Chriſt died for all men, 28, 29. Chriſt, whether he died for all men, and how, 942, &c. To die to ſin what it is, a puniſhment for ſin, 615. To die in ſin, what it is, ibid.

Dignity of Kings, Prieſts, and Prophets, 557. dignity of the Miniſters, 386.

Philoſophers moſt diligent to attaine to all kind kind of knowledge, 798. diligence of Pilate to search out the truth of Christ his cause, 363. How diligent we ought to be to know Christ, 846.

Discourse of Aristippus and Æschines, 506.

Dinner that God makes hath three courses, 333. The excellency of it, ibid.

Difference betwixt spirituall and eternall punishment, 756. Betwixt appearing in the forme of man and to be made man, 806. Betwixt assuming flesh and to be made flesh, 810 Betwixt the twofold generations of Christ and of the Saints, 831. Betwixt the Law and the Gospell, 847. Betwixt the sins of the godly and of the wicked threefold, betwixt feare and sorrow, 893. Betwixt the donation, manifestation, and application of Christs death, 432. Betwixt the generall and the speciall calling, 450. Betwixt the lives of the Saints and of the wicked, 461. Betwixt the true Saints and the outward professours, 463. Betwixt the true and counterfeit grace, 477. Betwixt the presence of Gods Spirit, and the sense of the comfort of Gods Spirit, 458. Betwixt the action and the obliquity of the action, 522. Betwixt our heavenly Father and all other fathers, 534. Betwixt Christus and Unctus, 549. Betwixt the old and new Testament, 70.

Dirt nothing so foule as sin, 616.

Disciples whether they stole Christ from the grave or not, 984.

Discipline what it is, 406.

Discontent with God what a heavy sinne, 750.

Discretion how needfull for Preachers, 1079.

Diseases of the soule, what they be, 623.

Discord, what it is like, 507.

Nothing can discontent the godly, 491.

Disobedience to God what a hainous sinne, 750. disobedience to parents what a tearefull sinne, ibid. disobedience to kings takes not away the right of Soveraignty, 544.

Distance of place disjoynes not spirituall unions, 157.

Dissembling with God most dangerous, 189

Dissimulation of the Church, 437.

Dissention in the Church and in the common-wealth, 413.

To distinguish of Gods power reconcileth diverse Authors, 693.

Dispersion of the Apostles grieved Christ, 895.

Who best disposed to receive grace, 453.

In distresse how we ought to seeke unto God, 933.

Division of the Church, 436.

Diversities of gifts and graces, 310.

Divels know God, and Christ, and the mystery of the Trinity, 798. They confesse Gods power, 701. How dangerous an enemy, 64. How cunning, 79. Dares not approach to an humble man, 112. The divels do believe, 276. They see much and heare much, and have no ubiquity, ibid. What they do know and believe, 276, 277. What they do chiefly maligne, 371. How the divell teacheth his schollers, 378. How he should be answered, ibid. Whom he setteth at variance, 413, 414. His speech to God at the last day, 418. He is our great enemy, 472. Hee warres against us, 492.

Divinity, what it aimeth at, 275. What it teacheth us, 514.

Do.

Doctors, when put in the cloud, 5.

Doctrine touching the person of Christ, how alwaies opposed by Satan, 792. doctrine of Divinity how deep and difficult, 846.

Doe, the properties of it, 112.

Doers most acceptable unto God, 221.

Pestiferous doctrines of the Iesuites and Puritans, 388.

Donations to Churches, the formes thereof, 415.

Doors being shut, how Christ came in, 844. Whatsoever God doth is no sin, 703, &c.

Dove most acceptable among all nations, 342. The praise of her, ibid. The properties of her, 343 Her swiftnesse, 344.

The doubtfull man believeth not, 402. doubting of Gods goodnesse what a fearfull sin, 749. That we should never doubt of Gods promises, 681.

Dr.

To draw neare to us how God is said, 703.

The drinking of Christ his cup what it signifieth, 210. The drunkennesse of our times, 10.

M. Drusus desired that all men might see what he did, 1007.

Du.

Duties of the wife and the husband to procure peace, 501. duties of inferiours to procure peace, 503. duties we owe to our heavenly Father, especially foure, 538. duties of Christians, 558, 559.

Dw.

Dwelling of Christ in us, how it is, 156.

Ea.

OVr eares what they are, 64, 65.

Earth accursed for the sin of man, 613. Earth how base, 163. Containing in it streames of fire, 164. By earth what is understood, 176. The analogy betwixt it and man, ibid. Three properties of it, 177. It bringeth foure things for mans use, 264.

Easter, the dissention about the keeping of it, 252. When celebrated, 376.

Ef.

Effects how ascribed to agents, 186. The effects that Christs suffering should worke in us,943.

Easter the dissension about the keeping of it,252. When celebrated, 376.

Eg.

Egyptians ignorant of the head of Nilus, 140. How they expressed death, 635. Egypts care for their Priests,414.

El.

No Elect can bee damned,426. The Elect shall be saved,28.

Election and reprobation most just, 456. Election is of some men not of all, 729. The Elect onely are effectually called, ibid.

Elizabeth the wife of Zacharias of what Tribe she was, 850. The Elects number is determined,425.

Em.

Emperors refused to be called Lords,541.

En.

The End of Christ his comming,49. The end of his death twofold,432.

All our Enemies how overcame, 64,65. Enemies to be loved for three reasons, 447 Inward enemies most dangerous,407. They are to be loved,447. Man the greatest enemie to himselfe,475. We have three sorts of enemies, 491. The enemies that do beset the godly,712 Enemies of Christ ascribed to him in mockery what he was indeed,873 Enemies of Christ what they testified of him,992.&c. Enemies of man specially three,995.

Envie what it did at all times,504. Envie of Satan against Christ,936. And why he envied him,436.

Ep.

Epicurus his sect the best of the Philosophers,hee confest the world had a beginning and should have ending,686.His unhappinesse to be mis-understood,69.

Eq.

Equality of sins confuted,603.

Equinox how varying,252.

Equity of eternall punishment for a temporall sin, shewed in two respects,650.

Christ equall to his Father,789.

Er.

Error of our dayes,51. Error of S. Augustine when hee was young, 233. Errors like the sands in foure respects,297. Errors of Mary Magdalen,324,325. Reproved by Christ,ibid. That wee should not erre with any master, 400.

Et.

Eternity what it is, 39. Eternity of Christ proved and the objections against the same answered,777,778.&c.

Eternall punishment how inflicted for a temporall sin,648.

Ethiopia's two,405.

Eu.

Eva beleeveth the divell,567.

Evangelist why hee saith the Word was made flesh rather then man, 822.

Eucharist by what names expressed, 234 Foure considerable things considering it,234. Like the Manna in five respects,235. Like the Arke in three respects,ibid. The author of it, 235. The blessing of it,236. The benefits of it, 237. The parts of it,237. The end of it threefold,238. The refusers of it what evills they procure,241. What hinder us to it,241,242. Foure sorts of receivers of it,242. Who to be excluded from it,ibid. How terrible to receive it unworthily,243.

Evill taken two waies, 521. It cannot subsist but in good,522. Evill of punishment taken two waies, 524. Nothing is absolutely evill,188. The evill that oppresseth every sinner twofold,802.

Evidence none good without witnesses,306 Evidences of saving grace,477

Eutychian heresie what it was, 832.

Ex.

To Examine all things, not at all times, 402.

Examination of our actions,80.

Examples of the Saints and not their shrines are to bee visited, 113. Example of Christ what it teacheth, 134. Examples of Gods Saints to be followed,136.372. Example of Mary Magdalen what it teacheth, 322. God doth many things for our example,363. Examples of men tortured by their consciences 495. Examples of Gods mercy in seeking after sinners,714. Examples of Gods slownesse to punish sin,724. Good examples a great meanes to further godlinesse 828. Examples of wilfull and spitefull sinners, 601. That wee ought carefully to examine whether we love God or not,721.

Excellency of our selves to bee denied,110. Excellencie of divine truth,736. Excellency of God cannot be conceived of us, 667. Excellencies of Christs man-hood were created excellencies,691.

Excuses of sinners to justifie themselves, 596. Excuses of sinners to lessen their sinnes, 658.

Three sorts of men Excluded from the Paschall Lambe,1067.

Excusers of sin how odious, 158.

Ey.

Eye of the Eagle, 112. Of the Raven, ibid. Our eyes what they are, 63.

ἐκτίσε, whether rightly translated, created, or not, 782.

Fa.

Faction in Germanie, 11.

Faculties of the soule three, 616. Every facultie of the soule defiled by sin, 616.

Faithfull of two sorts, 558.

Faith seeth what reason perceiveth not, 711 Faith better then curiosity, 236. It is wrought in us by two meanes, 239. The faith of the first Christians, 270. And how little now, ibid. Only in this life, 271 Inseparable from hope and love, 272. Without workes no true faith, 272. What faith may be without workes, 272, 273. How it justifieth, 274. The justifying faith cannot bee without charity or good workes, 274 faith fourefold, 276. Historicall, faith common to the divels, ibid. Faith how it commeth, ibid. It is knowledge, 277. Faith of divels a true faith, 277. Faith of miracles what it is, 278. Temporary faith what it is, 279. Justifying faith what it is, 279. Proper onely to the Elect, ibid. How it differeth from the other kindes of faith, 279, 280. Two effects of it, 280. True faithfull men what they doe, 280 Faith how it differeth from hope in three respects, 282. Greater then charity in three respects, without it nothing well done, nothing acceptable to God, 286 In what respect it justifieth, 288. It apprehendeth Christ, 36. The benefits of it twofold, 37. How strengthened, 43 True faith a speciall signe of saving grace, 478. Faith obtained and increased by three speciall meanes, 499.

Fall, many doe fall from Christ, 305. Who they be, ibid. True Saints cannot fall and why, ibid. What they must doe that would not fall, ibid. The falls of the Saints and sinners how different, 304. The falls of others what they should teach us, 325. Falls of the Saints why recorded, 462. Falling from grace what the Fathers and Schoolemen thinke of it, 481, 482.

Family from whence Christ descended, 849

Fast not on Sundaies, 367

Fathers how they doe extoll the power of God, 766. The name of father taken two waies, 777. God the Father doth alwaies beget the Son, 775. God is the Father of Christ otherwise then he is our Father, 784. The Father how he is greater then Christ, 789. The Father sent not Christ by way of command, 790. God called the Father of mercies but is never called the Father of vengeance, and why, 724. &c. Fathers what they thinke of the certainty of our state, 476. And of the falling from grace, 480. Father God is so in two respects, 531. From all eternity, ibid. Of all creatures, ibid. Of men two waies, 532. Heavenly Father differeth from all other Fathers 534. Divers sorts of Fathers, ibid. 535. Our Father simply in all respects is onely God, 535. Fathers should instruct their children, correct them, provide for them, &c. 537, 538. How deerely they should be loved of their children, 539.

Faults of some not to be ascribed unto all, 739. Faults of the Disciples Christ would not reveale, 904. Faults of great men, 104. Faults of our owne why not seene, 181. Faults of S. Peter, 200. Faults to bee shunned when wee speake of any one. ibid.

Fe.

Feare and hope to be joyned together, 298. The godly neede not feare any thing, 491. Feare and confidence to be coupled, 529. What we may feare, 245. Feare twofold, 488. 815. Religious feare keepes us from falling, ibid. How wee may feare to leese grace, ibid That we should feare our Lord, 582. That we should as well feare Gods justice as hope for his mercy, 753. Feare and sorrow how they differ, 893 What Christ feared, 893, 896. &c. Whom we need not feare, 968. God in what sence to be feared, 969. Magistrates and parents in what sence to be feared, 969. Feare brought into the world by sinne, 970. God how he ought to be feared, 971. That wee ought to feare in every state of grace, relaps and recoverie 971.

Feast-makers three sorts, 232. The divels feast in this life and in hell, ibid. Gods feast threefold, 233. Feast of unleavened bread, the chiefest of all the Iewish feasts, 250. Feasts of the Iewes translated, 252.

Feete that carrie us to Christ, 84. How they must be washed, shod and exercised, 85. The two feete of God, 529.

Felicitie twofold, 159. Of the body, ibid. Of the soule, 160.

Fi.

Fire hath two properties, 530. Fire of Gods judgement, 12. Fire how contrary to the earth, 163. The excellencie of it, ibid. Three things in it, 274. Sixe sorts of men that are fire, 168. The celestiall fire signifieth five things, 170. Infernall fire fivefold, 173. Fire of Christ what it doth, 177. Fire and sinne cannot bee concealed, 592. Fire and sinne not resisted, will necessarily increase, 594.

Fiends of man two, 468.

First begotten Sonne of God, in what respect Christ is so said to be, 784. First in Gods service we should all strive to be, 999. &c.

Filled with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost the Apostles onely, 1053.

Flatterer how evill he is, and whom hee harteth, 169. The flatteries of heretiques, 302 How they deale with the rich, 397.

Fl.

Flesh how dangerous an enemie, 63. Flesh of Christ the most acceptable sacrifice, 265. How deified, ibid. & 833. Our owne flesh wars againſt us,490. Fleſh apt to conceive ſin,550. Fleſh taken for the corrupted qualitie of man, 587. Fleſh of Chriſt made by all the perſons of the Trinity,804. Fleſh divers kinds, 817. Our fleſh aſſumed by Chriſt, 833. Fleſh of Chriſt how ſaid to doe divine operations,845 Fleſh the tenderer, the more ſenſible of paine, 915.

Flie from our enemies lawfull, 331,588. In a battell ſometimes commendable, ibid. Our flight muſt bee ſpirituall, 345.

Flouted, how Chriſt was by all men,913.

Floods ſignifie adverſities,301.

Fo.

Follie of men,91. Of ſinners,260.

Follow whom we ought,71. To follow Chriſt, the benefits of it,217. Wherein we ought not to follow Chriſt,218. Wherein we ought to follow Chriſt, 219. In workes and not in words onely, 221 Chriſt to be followed foure manner of waies,222. Evill followers of Chriſt three ſorts, 223. Who are to follow Chriſt,224 How few doe rightly follow him, ibid. The number of ſinners,645.

Forbearance to puniſh ſinne increaſeth the number of ſins,645.

Forgetfullneſſe the height of ingratitude, 238. An infernall fiend, 621. Forgetfullneſſe ſometimes needfull, 374. God cannot forget to be mercifull, 719. We ought to forget all injuries.747.

Forgives not his enemies ſinnes doth ſinne more then enemie,447. To Forgive offences procureth peace,505. To forgive ſinne the greateſt worke of Gods power,687. God able to forgive ſinnes, ibid. In Gods forgiving our ſinnes many particulars are to be conſidered, 716. God forgiveth all ſinnes or no ſinne, 718.

Forgiveneſſe of ſinnes our chiefeſt comfort,740 &c. That we ought to forgive one another,746.&c.

Fore-Fathers how they exceeded us in devotion,1088.

Forme of God to bee in, is to be very God, 778.

Fortitude of the women ſeeking Chriſt, 957.

Fore-ſight of good and evill not the cauſe of the puniſhment or reward of either, 648. &c.

Fortune a vaine name or conceit,518. The heathens falſly aſcribed to fortune what is true of God,686.

Fountaines invented that hold no water, 353.

Foure points handled touching the power of God,684.

Foure ſorts of men erre about the doctrine of Gods power,685.

Foure ſpeciall graces beſtowed upon the Elect,730.

Foure waies of redemption,940.

Foure ſorts of aſcenders,1012.

Fourefold end of Chriſt his aſcention, 1050.

Foure points conſidered about the gifts of God,1031.

Foure ſignes of fullneſſe,1058.

Fourefold ſeale or ſigne wherewith the Saints are ſealed,1060.

Foure ſorts of receivers of the Sacraments and many more Foure, &c. 1066, 1067 &c.

The Fowle that reſembleth a man, &c. 318

Fowler very cunning is the divell,346.

Foxe the properties of him,254.

Fr.

Frailties humane Chriſt aſſumed all, 823. Frailties of Mary Magdalen, 324. Of the beſt men,325. No priviledge to exempt us from them, ibid. Frailties of man ſeene eſpecially in three things.473.

Fraud and deceit,411.

Freed the Saints are from all enemies,1028. Chriſt freed us from Satan to what end, 1029. Not to doe what we liſt, 1029.

Friends all to be forſaken rather then offend God,226. Friends of Chriſt how deerely hee loved them,933.

Fruits where looked for, 185. Fruits of grace,475. The fruits of the Spirit twofold, ibid. Three outward fruits of Gods Spirit,476 God expecteth not the like fruits from all men,1006.

Ga.

Galileans ſlaughter,180. How farre they periſhed,156.

Gameſters and gamehouſes the great abuſe of them,220.

Gate of heaven how ſtraight and how wide, 137.

Gallants no great gnoſticks in divinity,275

Why Chriſt went to the Garden of Gethſemane to be taken and what befell him there, 888.

Gaufredus Clarevallenſis what he ſaid,1015

Ge.

Gentiles errors and idolatries, 305. Two Gentlemen that wanted ſervice,221.

Generation of Chriſt twofold,782.&c.

Gentiles were not altogether ignorant of the Word,796. What they writ of the name of Chriſt,796.&c. Gentiles how they might come to the knowledge of this Word,797.&c. Gentiles expected the comming of the Meſſias,799 859.

Generality of Chriſt his ſuffering,914.

Gi.

Gifts why given,30. What they have done, 31. The properties of a commendable gift three, ibid. Chriſt given foure waies,32. Daily given, 33. The greateſt gift, ibid. Why God Gave him,36. Gifts received to be accounted for,518. Gift of God hath a threefold voice, ibid. Gifts of God threefold,519. Gifts of nature to be accounted for.519. Temporall gifts, ibid Spirituall gifts, ibid.

Gifts of God of two ſorts, 723. 1031. He giveth ſpirituall gifts to the godly, ibid. And temporall gifts to the wicked, ibid. Gifts of God are free gifts, 1031 diverſly beſtowed, 958 Every man ſhould be contented with the gifts God giveth him, 959. Diverſity of gifts among the Apoſtles and Fathers, 958. &c. Gifts requiſite for Preachers, 1032. Gifts to edifie the Church, how given, 1033. Speciall gifts of God, whereby the Elect are ſaved unpoſſibly to be knowne, 1036. Gifts of prayer the chiefeſt of all Gods graces, 1098. Gifts of the Magi, what they ſhewed Chriſt to bee, 859.

Gl.

Glorification of a body, taketh not away the eſſentiall properties of a body, 707.

Glory of Chriſt ſhould be chiefely aimed at by all preachers, 768.

Gn.

Gnoſticks that will not practiſe reproved, 275.

Go.

All Good from grace, 474.

Goodneſſe of God ſeene in three things, 9. Our goodneſſe not the cauſe of grace, 470 Our good all from God, 15. Conceit of our good whence it ſprings, 17 Some good things in the divell and in the wicked, 368, 369. Seaven degrees of good, 515.

God the love and life and ſole delight of our ſoule, 124.

Godly men are the ſons of God, 539. Godly men the happieſt in the world, 159. Alwaies among the wicked, 433.

God guideth all things, 3. All in all, 57, with us two waies, 58, with his Saints two waies, 58, 59 For us two waies, temporally foure waies, 59. And ſpiritually foure waies. 60 What he doth, 94. The author of all afflictions, 92. How hee dealeth with his ſervants, 133, 135. How deſirous to doe us good, 142. How he hath bleſſed us, 149. Preſerved us, ibid. Spareth us, 150 And deales with us, ibid. Why he commandeth things we cannot do, 155. How incomprehenſible he is in three reſpects, 161. How he doth all things, eaſily, wiſely and graciouſly, 162. Why he made all things, 162. His uſuall practiſe with ſinners, 184. His abundant mercy, 196. His juſtice, 247. The giver of all things, 334. Not to be refuſed for man, 389. Worketh all graces in them whom he would have ſaved, 424. Deludeth no man, 426. Dealeth juſtly with the wicked, and ſheweth mercy to the godly, ibid. No author of evill, nor of ſin, 524, That he effecteth evill and why, 524. He is the author of all goodneſſe, 525.

Gods many called, 527.

True God how diſtinguiſhed from others, 527.

God what it ſignifieth, 529.

The Gods of the high waies, 463.

Godly need not feare any thing, 491.

Governement how difficult, 371.

Governement of the Presbytery how now, 400.

A good Governors proteſtation, 503.

Goſpell of Saint Matthew thought to bee written firſt in greeke, 378.

Goſpell the ſumme of it, 531.

Goſpell ſtricter then the law, 131.

Goſpell biddeth and forbiddeth many things which the law doth not, 584.

Goſpell in the law and law in the Goſpell, 741. Not alwaies to be preached, 185.

God how ſaid to be the Father of Spirits, 570.

Godly mens ſinning differ in three things from the wicked, 602. &c.

Godly life maketh a happy death, 639.

God loveth righteouſneſſe, 646. No reſpecter of perſons, 646. Moſt juſt, 645. Iudgeth every man according to his deſert, 647. How great, and how mighty hee is, 652. How ineffable, 679. A moſt faithfull performer of all his promiſes, 680. How he guideth and governeth all things, 686.

Of his owne nature moſt intelligible, 674.

To us incomprehenſible, 674.

That there is but one God, proved many waies, 771.

God onely to be prayed unto, 1087.

Chriſt no titular, but a true God by nature proved, 777. &c.

To deny the God-head of Chriſt what a hainous ſin, 791.

God-head of Chriſt ſuffered not, but ſuſtained the Man-hood to ſuffer, 877. 916.

The godly how they doe aſcend, 1015.

Love of goodneſſe ſhould make us hate ſin, 624 Goodneſſe of God to man, how incomprehenſible, 953. God good to all things, 726. Perfectly, abſolutely, and univerſally good, 726 Nothing abſolutely good but God, 726.

Gods ſpeciall goodneſſe ſeene in two things, 729. It preſerveth the Saints from ſinning, 730. From puniſhments, 730.

Gods goodneſſe, how abuſed by the wicked, 741.

Goo.

Goodneſſe how vaild we are of it, 57. Not the leaſt degreee from our ſelves, 515. Goodneſſe of God the height of his excellencie, 163 Wherein the greatneſſe of it doth appeare, ibid. No goodneſſe to be aſcribed to our ſelves, 516. All good, are gifts of God, 516. Goodneſſe ſeene in little things, 527. Temporall goods are bleſſings, 517. Good and godly men ought to bee cheriſhed and promoted, 658. Goodneſſe what it is, 725. Goodneſſe of things twofold, 726. Goodneſſe of God twofold, 726. Generall goodneſſe of God ſeene in two things, 726, 727.

All things made good in their kinde, 727.

Good for ſome uſe, yet not univerſally good, 727.

Goodneſſe of God withholdeth the wicked from many ſins ſuſpendeth our juſt deſerved puniſhments, 727.

How

How it extendeth it ſelfe to all men, 728, 729. Yet not alike good to all men, ibid.

Goodneſſe of God moſt of all ſeene in our afflictions, 731.

All our goodneſſe to be aſcribed to God, 732

To the glory of Chriſt, 767. We ca i do no good of our ſelves, 732. The boundleſſe goodneſſe of Gods providence, 762. Many impreſſions of Gods goodneſſe infixed in the creatures, 762. Beſt good we can doe unto our children, is to ſerve God, 757. not to do good, a ſin, 744. Ill gotten goods never thrive, 757. No good in the Saints but what God worketh in them, 774. Why goodneſſe is aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt, 773.

Gra.

Grace twofold, 35. Saving grace not offered to all, 147. Grace the effects of it, 209.

Great ones how few good, 312. and why, ibid Greatneſſe and goodneſſe of God joyned together and why, 529. Great griefe amaze us, 317.

Grace three degrees, 313. Grace to uſe Gods grace a ſpeciall grace, 335.

Vniverſall grace confuted, 423. Wrought in them whom God will ſave, 424

Saving grace why denyed to the wicked, 427, 428. Wrought uſually by outward meanes 452. Graces of God all beſtowed moſt juſtly, 456. Grace and peace the chiefeſt good things, 468. Grace how taken, ibid. The divers kindes of graces, 471, 472. The neceſſity of grace, ibid. The certainty of grace, 474. Three fruits of it, 475.

Three properties of true grace, 477.

The foure evidences of ſaving grace, ibid.

Saving grace once had and never loſt, 479, 480. &c.

God giveth his grace two manner of waies, 179. Graces of the wicked true graces yet may be loſt, 480 no grace from our ſelves, 515 Grace proceeds from Chriſt, 526 How the ſame proceeds from each perſon, 527. Grace not traduced from the beſt parents, 572. Word gracious what it ſignifieth, 722. God is gracious in all reſpects, 722 Graces ſpecially beſtowed upon the El ct, 830. Grace of juſtification what it is, 732. Grace of Sanctification what it is, 732. Grace of glorification what it is, 732.

Graces of God denied unto the children for the fathers ſins, 756, 757. Graces of God not given in the like meaſure to all men, 1006. We ought to examine what graces we have, 1036 chiefeſt graces of God, faith, hope, chariy, 1048 Graces of Chriſt to ſanctifie our ſoules are twofold, 1036. Grace of Chriſt ought in all things to be extolled, and our ſelves extenuated, 767.

Great ſins muſt have great repentance, 595. Great mens ſins, are great ſins, 604. Great men have no excuſes for their ſins, 605. Great men have no priviledge to ſin, 605. Their ſtate very dangerous, 605. How ſubject to dangers, 1084 Father how greater then Chriſt. 789 &c. Great ſins puniſhed with great puniſhments, 647. Great men how they uſe to deale with the poore, 746.

What Chriſt grieved at in the garden, 888. Griefe of Chriſt on the Croſſe aggravated by all circumſtances, 913.

Growth of ſin how to be hindered, 657.

A Gradation in the love of God, 728.

Gueſts that Chriſt inviteth who they be, 240

Wedding Garment what it is, 244.

Ha.

TO Hate the godly the greateſt impiety, 447.

Hayre how comely for women, 321.

Our Hands what they are, 64.

Harlot what manner of water ſhe is, 411.

Habituall ſins hardly repelled, 595.

Harlots how they deceive men, 612.

Haynouſneſſe of ſin ſeene in three reſpects, 650.

To hazard all in defence of truth, 737.

Happineſſe coveted by every one, 68.

He.

Hearers of Chriſt of two ſorts, 291.

The evill Hearers deſcribed, 305.

Heathens prayed to their Heroes departed, 289.

Hereſies whence they ſpring, 379.

Heretiques properties, 399. Their craft, 401 They beleeve themſelves and not the Goſpell, 404.

By Hearing Gods Word our faith increaſed, 499 Hearing Gods Word how fearefull to deſpiſe it, 47. That it is a fruit of Gods Scepter, 476.

Our Hearts what they are and how deceitfull and wicked, 64

Heart why compared to a doore, 144.

Chiefely deſired, either by God or the divell, 145 Commandeth all the body, judgeth all things, and all things judged according to it, 145. The ſignes of a good heart, 146. Very deceitfull, ibid. Heart of Adam before his fall open to God, 147.

Hereticke how dangerous a fire eſpecially if he be in favour with his Prince, 168. & 169. How cruell and bloody, 302.

Hecubas dreame, 170.

All Hearers how hard to be ſatisfied, 200.

Heart to be carefully watched, 588.

Hell paines how intollerable, 641.

Heathens how they extolled the power of God, 701.

Hebrewes often uſe the preſent tenſe for the future tenſe, 782.

The Head alwaies chiefely oppoſed, 792.

Chriſt borne in the raigne of Herod and why, 853.

Hereticks how wicked to denie the Godhead of Chriſt, 792.

Herod what he did to Chriſt, 907.

Hell in the Article of our Creede, ſignifieth not the grave, 995. Hell deſtroyed by Chriſt three waies, 995.

That there be three Heavens, 1022. The man Chriſt in the higheſt part of Heaven, 1022. and why, 1023.

Nothing so heavie as sin, 1026.
Hearing of Gods Word a speciall meanes to get grace, 1065.
Divers sorts of Hearers, 1065.
Heresie of Novatus, 660. 1901.
Of Pellagius, 660.
Of Arrius and his objections answered, 780 781.
Heresie of Apelles and Apolinaris, 819.
Of the Anabaptists, 893.
Of Samosatenus, 830.
Of Eutyches, 832, 833.
Of Cerinthus, and Nestorius, concerning the person of Christ, and their objections answered, 836.
Heresies to be shewed and why, 846.

Hi.

Highest things in greatest danger, 113.
Every one laboureth to Hide his sinnes, 591.
None can hide his sinnes from God, 592.
Humble mans character, 114.
Humility twofold, false humility twofold, 114.
True Humility praised, 166.

Ho.

Civill Honesty like the sands in foure respects, 293.
Honor what it is, 81. Honor wished, 336. Breeds learning. 408.
Holy Ghost why not mentioned in many places, 528.
Honorable titles not to be taken away from men, 536.
What Holinesse was in the world and how it came corrupted, 459.
God Holy in all his doings, 456. Foure sorts of creatures holy, 457. Christ holy in a double respect, 457.
Holinesse required in Priests more then in any other, 164. Not to be proud of it, 110. Faigned Holinesse like sands in foure respects, 295. Holinesse the chiefest attribute of God, 455. The onely thing that God requireth of us, 465. The excellencie of it, 466. And what should incite us to practise it, 407. Hagar persecuted Sara, 405.
Hope what it doth, 19. How great in the primitive Christians, 270. How it differeth from faith, 282. What it is, ibid. The praise of it, 283. Hope of the wicked how vaine, 282. No sinner excluded from Hope of pardon, 742.
Honorius his childishnesse, 769.
Word ὁμοούσιος not first invented by the Orthodoxe Fathers, 786. &c. Iustified as it is used, 786.
Holy Ghost whether tearmed the Word or not, 803.
Our Hope supported by the meditation of Christ his passion, 869.
Holy Ghost a true God proved, 1054.
Holy Ghost appeared in the likenesse of five speciall things, 1055. And why, ibid.
Holy Ghost, how we may know whether we have it or not, 1062.
To want the Holy Ghost, is a marke of a lost one, 1063.
Christ why he went out of the House to bee taken, 877.
Hope what it is, and how it differeth from faith, 1048, 1049. Hope twofold, 1049.
Humane hope what it doth, and divine hope what it doth, 1049. Every hope in God maketh not happie, 1050.

Hu.

Humility of S. Peter and of others, 101. Humility not found in all the writings of the Philosophers, 219. Found onely in Christs Schoole, 219 Humility the degrees thereof, 106 The opposite vices of it, 107. Kinds of it, 108 Outward humlity deceives many, ib. Most men aime at this, 108. Humility the greatest honor, 109 Inward humility wherein it consisteth, 109
Humility the excellencie of it, 110. What the Scriptures say of it, 110. It procures our desires, 111. It brings us to honour, 111. What it made the Sonne of God to doe, 111. What it is, and what it brings us, 111. To what it is compared, 112.
Humanity of Christ onely suffered, 877.
Humanity of Christ not capable of infinite excellencies, 690.
Humane acts how said to be done by God, 703.
Humility of Christ, 822.
Seene in the incarnation of Christ, 827.

Hy.

Hypocrites their properties, 222. Tearmed friends in two respects, 247. What they doe, 141.
Hypocriticall Christians, 341.
Hypocrites ever among the godly, 448.
Hypocrisie of Pilate, 368.

Ia.

Iames most like unto Christ, 900.

Id.

Idlenesse a furtherance to sin, 587.
Idolatry a great master sinne, 606. How horrible it is, 749.
Idlenesse hinders us to Christ, 76. 346. Hated of the divell, 78. That we should never be idle, 346.
Idolatries of the Gentiles, 305.

Ie.

Iewes laden with rites and ceremonies, 129. Their madnesse shewed three waies, 384.
Iesters at religious men how odious, 448.
Iewes what they thought of the Galileans, 181
Iewes destruction, 217. Three things considerable in them, 360. Their vices, 361.
Indian Merchant how hee dealt with his asse, 288.

Iehova how translated and read, 541.

Iesus how sweet a name, the signification of it, 352 How Iesus saved us, 353. The excellency of this name, the mystery of the letters of it, and the mystery of the Trinity contained in it, 354, 545. The precious effects of the meditation upon this name, 355. The reverence we owe to it, ibid.

Iewes, why they believe not Iesus the Son of Mary to be the true Messias, 983.

Iehovah the essentiall and most proper name of God, 677. It signifieth an eternall being, ibid. In Hebrew containeth nothing but consonants, in Latine nothing but vowels, and why, 679. Knowne to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, ibid. Why translated Lord, 682. Christ true Iehova, 777.

Iesuites, what they say to prove transubstantiation, 709.

Iewes rightly understood Christ teaching himselfe to be equall to the Father, 789. Rejection of the Iewes grieved Christ, 895. Iewes how cunningly they sought to incense Pilate against Christ, 906, 907.

Ig.

Ignorance of our state hinders the teares of contrition, 319. Loseth Christ, 323. The cause of separation from the Church, 463. Ignorance twofold, 597, 825. Simple ignorance doth extenuate a sin, 597. Affected ignorance tripleth the sin, ibid Wilfull ignorance what a fearfull sin, 598. Christ was ignorant of some things, & how he might be said to be ignorant of any thing, 826. ignorance of Gods power the cause of many heresies, 684. How ignorant many men are of the chiefest points of Christianity, 847.

Im.

Immortality, foure sorts of it, 160.

Greatest impiety to hate the godly, 447.

Imitation of the divell makes us the children of the divell, 535.

We ought to imitate our heavenly Father, 539.

Immortality how to be attained, 680.

Impossible things for God to do, of two sorts, 703. Impossible for God to make the things which are, not to have been, 704.

Image of God could be repaired by none but by God, 802. We are apt to imitate our parents, 754. Wherein we ought to imitate God, 743. To imitate Christ the safest way to walk, 828.

In.

Our incredulity, and why, 15.

Infidelity the mother of many evils, 19.

Injuries to be forgiven, 284.

Inviters, foure sorts, 71.

Invitation of Christ generall, ibid.

Instructers who best, 97.

Infirmities of the Saints why recorded, 207. Mans twofold infirmity, 473.

Innocency, how loved of God and honoured by the Church, 211.

Inviters to the feast, 239. And their properties, ibid.

Innocency must be affected, 260. Innocents should not be wronged, 388.

Iniquity of these times, 270.

Inferiours not to oppose their superiours, 558.

Ingratitude of man how horrible, 284.

The insufficiency of man, 515.

The Indian Gymnosophist, 514.

Incredulity the cause of many errours, 325.

Infidelity of Pilate, 368.

Infancy and full age of the Church not alike, 528.

Injustice of Pilate seen five wayes, 364.

Instruction to be given to children, 537.

Invocation of Saints when it began, 457.

Indulgence of fathers to their children, 538.

Inconstancy of many men, 392. First authors of it, 393. And the punishment of it, ibid. The inconstancy of many, 396. Of some Preachers, 389, 399.

Indian Noble-man, what he said to the Spanish Priest, 404.

Indisposed to be called, who they be, 453.

Our Intercessour Christ alone, 553.

How ineffable God is, 679.

Sinnes of infirmity what they are, 599. There is no man free from them, 599. Knowne by foure especiall notes, ibid. Infirmities of Christ prove the manhood of Christ, 821. Our infirmities, why Christ did undertake them, 823. Infirmities of how many sorts, 824. Infirmities not sinfull twofold, ibid. What infirmities Christ tooke on him, ibid. &c.

Incarnation of the Word why decreed for our salvation, 801. Incarnation of Christ, what benefit it bringeth, 819. The greatest argument of Gods love, 762.

That we are not in God, as Christ is in God, 789.

Christ as man, for ever inferiour to his Father, 791.

Condemnation of all infidels grieved Christ, 896.

Infamy described, and the miseries thereof shewed, 627.

Three things should expell ingratitude from us, 1085.

God looketh into the intention of the heart, 617.

Invocation for two things, 1081.

Io.

S. Iohn how loved best, diverse opinions, 203, 204 His abode on earth, 208. When he drank of Christ his cup, 210. The cause of his tarying, 211.

Iohannes Alexandrinus what he did, 767.

Iosephus what he writ of Christ, 992.

Ioy of heaven how excellent, 135. No true joy but in God, ibid. Our joy should be spirituall, 326.

Ir.

Sinne called irremissible three wayes, 742.

Is.

Israelites, how divided, 258. Wherin they had there names, 360.

Iu.

Iudgement office, 11. Last judgement, the manner of it, 12. Iudgements of God shewed two wayes, 150. To judge of none by their death, 182.

Iudas his repentance, his contrition, confession, and satisfaction, and wherein it failed, 191, 192.

Iustice of God, 247.

Iudgement of God exalted two wayes, 248.

Iustinians true saying, 307.

Iudges how carefull they should be to examine things, 361.

Iustification ascribed to the free grace of God, 469.

We are justified by Gods free love, and not by any infused grace, 470. Proved, 471.

Iustification first and second a most vaine distinction, 545, 546.

Iudas, what benefits he received from Christ, 898. Why chosen to be an Apostle, ibid Why made the purse-bearer, ibid. Why he betrayed Christ, 899. Why he gave them a signe, 900. How sought to be reclaimed by Christ, 901. What his treason should teach us, 902. His arrogancy and iniquity how great, 900. Why he kissed Christ, ibid

That it is a just thing to punish sin, 645.

Iustice is often perverted with men, 646.

God judgeth all men according to what they have actually done, 649.

God in the strictnesse of his justice might inflict more punishment upon the damned, 720. Every one according to his desert, 647.

God most just, proved, 646. Whatsoever he doth, is just, 784.

Iustice of God taken diverse waies, 748. Iustice of God requireth a day of judgement, 753. How it stands with Gods justice to punish the fathers sinnes upon the children, 753. Iustice and truth how they pleaded against man, 801.

Iudge not to be timerous, 367.

That we should as well feare Gods justice as hope for mercy, 753.

Iudgements of God must be threatned, when his mercies do not allure us. 1079.

Iustification, what it is, 732.

Christ justified by his enemies, 872.

Ki.

Kings whether they only were Christi, and Priests Uncti, 549.

Kings and Priests, how they should defend and love each other, 550.

Christ a King, 46, 358. What manner of King, 358, 359

Kingly office of Christ differenced from all other kingdomes, 358. Eternall kingdome, what a madnesse to lose it, 352. Kings greatest glory in the goodnesse of his subjects, 360. Christ not an ordinary, but a speciall King of the Iewes, 361. Christ a King of all nations, 362. Why called King of the Iewes. ibid. Kings and Priests in greatest danger, 370. Kings placed by God to be his under-Gods on earth, 385, Not to have the least indignity offered them, ibid Not to touch one another, 385. Invulnerable, ibid. Not to be excommunicated, 388. good or bad they ought to be obeyed, 389. Not to be obeyed before God, ibid. Kings above all Prophets and Priests, 389. More feared by many men than God, 390.

Kingdome of Christ without ending, 556. Wicked kingdome described, 509. kingdome of heaven could be given by none but by God, 882.

Kings and Magistrates to be prayed for, and why, 110, &c.

Kisses, that there be five kinds, 899.

Kn.

Knocking of God three wayes, 148.

We know a thing three wayes, 475. Not certainly know our state for three reasons, ibid. How to know whether we have grace or not, 475. All knowledge of saving grace is very weake, and why, 476. Our knowledge must be operative, 477 communicative and sanctified, ibid knowledge of God no cause of sinne, 522. That we ought to be expert in the knowledge of Gods will, 561. Saving knowledge, 62, 83. The excellency of knowledge, 83. The best knowledge, and what we should know, ibid. knowledge how gotten, 96. We know Christ not by his face, but by his voice, 327. Vnsanctified knowledge what a miserable thing, 338. God knoweth best when to help us, 1094, &c. knowledge most necessary for Preachers, 1032. Adams desire of knowledge brought ignorance upon us all, 620. Sinnes of knowledge most fearefull inexcusable sinnes. 598. And yet we do what we know to be fearefull sinnes, ibid The excellency of divine knowledge, 561 The excellency of our knowledge makes our sinnes the more horrible, 598. All knowledge of God extinguished by sin, 623. Three ways of knowing God, 674. We are not able to know him as he is in himselfe, ibid. Knowledge of Gods power the foundation of our faith, 684. We know many things negatively, as what God is not, which we know not positively, 711. We know what God cannot do, though we know not what he can do, ibid. To know Christ the only thing that makes us happy, 764 It suppresseth all vices, 765. The Gentiles had a measure of the knowledge of God, 796, &c. The divels know God, and the mystery of the Trinity, 798. Knowledge of Christ twofold, 826. Knowledge of Iesus Christ the chiefest knowledge in the world, 846. The divell chiefly laboureth to corrupt it, ibid. We know not what is good for our selves, 1095.

La.

La.

Laodiceans, why ſo called, 146, 316.

Law a yoke in ſeven reſpects, 93. Law why given, 306, 518. The ſumme of it, 531.

Lactantius his ſweet ſaying, 40.

Labour, the benefits of it threefold, 76. Adored for a god, 778. Diverſe kinds of it, 78. Vnrewarded, ibid. labour how pleaſant to a worldling, 131. How much ſome take for ſmall benefits, 135. Made eaſie by cuſtome, 137.

Lambe, the properties of it, 254. The Paſchall Lamb, how it was to be qualified, 256. Whether it was a Sacrament or a ſacrifice, 257. How it was to be eaten, 259, 261.

Lamian witches, what they did, 504.

Labour vndertaken upon hope of reward, 565. Labourer preſently to have his pay, ibid.

Law of nature and of all nations teacheth to puniſh ſin, 645. lawes of men like a ſpiders web, 645. law of God like an iron net, ibid. lawes muſt be made according to the rules of mens ability to keepe them, 733. law in the Goſpell, 741. That the law was not created, 781. To keep Gods lawes made David wiſer than his teachers, 989. law of God given to be kept, not to be talked of, 1005.

Languages and ready ſpeech requiſite for Preachers, 1032.

Le.

Leaven, how diligently to be avoided, 259. The myſtery of it, ibid.

Legendary of a rich man, 310.

Moſt learning written in Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, 378.

Letters how uſed by the ancients to ſignifie diverſe things, 907.

Learning, what an excellent thing, 96 All deſire it, ibid. It allaies all miſeries, ibid. What the lazy ſay againſt it, ibid. The benefits of it, ibid. learned men how much eſteemed, 97. learning, what it troubles not it ſelfe about, and wherein it is buſied, ibid. To what it is unlike, and to what like, 98. learning depraved how dangerous, ibid. learning how neceſſary for all Preachers, 377.

Li.

Libertines, how miſtaken, 91.

Lions whelp, how long he ſleepeth, and how rowzed, 122.

Life ſhortened by our ſins, 183. man lives a double life, 239. Three things neceſſary for each life, ibid.

Liberty of will not deſtroyed, 487.

Light, the excellency of it, 37.

Life preferred before light, ibid. How nature favoureth it, ibid. How miſerable is the life of man, ibid. How excellent in it ſelfe, ibid. life of nature how meane, ibid. life of man how ſhort, 556. Everlaſting life twofold, 39.

How little will content nature, 513.

Lion, why Chriſt is compared to it, 253.

God the very life of all things, 679. life of Chriſt a continuall ſuffering, 875. A good life, what it effecteth, 1005. Bad life, what evill it doth, ibid.

The wicked are liſted up to be thrown down, 1014.

Lies how eaſily believed, 284. The ſtory of the lady lie and truth, 285.

Lo.

Love like wings, the power of it, 132. Self-love, and the miſchiefs of it, 173.

Chriſt loſt two wayes, 322. And foure wayes, ibid. Chriſt loſt hard to bee found, 324.

Love of Chriſt, how exceeding great, 48. Our love of God how tried, 62. love is our life, 124. Two loves in Chriſt, 204. Title Lord refuſed by Emperours, 540. God when firſt called Lord, ibid. Chriſt our Lord two wayes, 542. Made Lord by a threefold right, ibid. An abſolute Lord every way, ibid. A Lords properties, 543. Chriſt is Lord of the godly and wicked, but not after the ſame manner, 544.

Loynes, Chriſt how in the loynes of Abraham, 552.

Love of God not alwaies perceived in the ſame meaſure, 204. The property of true love, 205. Our love to our neighbour how it ought to be foure-fold, 219. love of Chriſt to his Church, 232. love of our neighbours how carefull God is to preſerve it, 258. it makes enemies to become our friends, ibid. the love of the firſt Chriſtians, 270. How little now, ibid. Worldly love hinders repentance, 319. The love of Chriſt to do us good, 333. Twofold love both to God and man, 339. The uſuall love of maſters to their ſervants, 339, 340. Our love to God and to our neighbour, how it ought to be, ibid. Gods love to the Saints how abundant, 433. love like fire, three things in it, 438. The large extent of Gods love, 439. An order in Gods love 430. That God loved mankind above all creatures, ibid. Chriſt his love made him to ſuffer all that he ſuffered for us, 440. love of God twofold, ibid. Gods love the cauſe of all our goodneſſe, 441. Gods love to us our greateſt comfort, 442. We ought to love men better than all creatures, ibid. The ſenſe of Gods love retained and increaſed by three things, 442. love the beſt of all graces, 443. All things how to be loved rightly, 443, 444. Three degrees of loving God, 444 God to be loved 3 wayes, ibid. love twofold, 445. God to be loved above all things, ibid. Two properties of love, ibid. Three reaſons why we ſhould love all men, 446. To love our enemies, 447. Saints chiefly to be loved, ibid. Wicked to be loved, ibid Our love to our neighbour, wherein it conſiſteth, 448, 449. love and charity the fruit of Gods Spirit, 476. greatneſſe of Gods love, and immutability of it, 536.

Chriſt moſt properly called Lord 682.

λόγος what it ſignifieth, 793. Why uſed by the Evangeliſt, 795.

The

The beſt knowne name of Chriſt among the Iewes,796.

God loveth not the wicked,721. love of God in giving Chriſt to be incarnate, how great it was,791.

Loaves of bread how multiplied by Chriſt, 710.

God onely abſolute Lord, 682. Lord and Iehova equivalent,ibid. Lord taken two ways, ibid. Men may be called Lords,ibid. Our Lord ſhould be feared and ſerved for three ſpeciall reaſons,683.

Love of God confirmed with ſignes, 15. love fruitleſſe worth nothing, ibid. love of Chriſt,the greateſt ſigne of it, 48. to love us how many pretend,23. love the ſtrongeſt of paſſions,24. The excellency of it,ibid. Three things in it,25. Gods love everlaſting,and the cauſe of all things, 27. love of the world excludes Gods love,28. love of God how great, 30. Our love to God like fire, 170. To love God is not to offend him,792. love of the Father ſeene in giving Chriſt to be incarnate, 827. love of Chriſt ſeen in his incarnation, ibid. Our love to God increaſed by the meditation of Chriſt his paſſion,868. love of God to mankind moved him to give his Sonne to die for man,939. How great his love was to man, ibid. love of Chriſt to man how unſpeakable,ibid. How dearely we ought to love Chriſt.944. To love one another,how we are bound unto it,946. Want of love the cauſe of all miſchiefe in the world, ibid. We ought to love all men,ibid. love of money what it doth, 985. love ſhewed foure wayes, 1077. That there is a gradation in the love of God, 1068.

Man loſt a twofold good,802.

Lu.

Ludovicus Lantgraves ſecurity and deſperate arguing,307.

Carnall luſt,173. luſt and grace in every Saint, 478. To ſubdue our luſt a ſigne of grace,ibid. Vntamed luſts, what an odious ſin,750.

S. Lukes words, he ſhall be called the Sonne of God,how underſtood,780.

Lutherans, what they teach concerning the union of the two natures of Chriſt, 838. Lutheran doctrine what abſurdities it brings forth,838.

Ly.

Lyturgy of our Church,400.

Lyzards what they do,397.

Ma.

Madneſſe of the Iewes ſhewed three ways, 384.

Man wonderfull fraile, 473. His twofold infirmity, ibid. Why made mutable,522.

Mandrabulus his ſervice,310,397.

Man following his vocation is the ſafer from Satan,587. man received power to beget man like himſelfe,571.

Manner how every ſin is committed foure-fold,596.

Sinnes of malice have two violent properties,600. malice of Satan reſtrained,712.

Man, what a poore and a miſerable thing, 654.

Manhood deſcribed, and the miſeries thereof,628.

Manner how the Father begetteth the Son, or the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth, is ineffable, 776. manner of divine myſteries not curiouſly to be ſearched into,776.

No man truly rich,779.

Malice of hereticks ſeene in denying the Godhead of Chriſt,792.

Not to marrie with wicked ſinners,657.

Mankind produced three wayes before Chriſt his time,813.

Manner how Chriſt was conceived,814. It is ineffable,814.

Chriſt made a perfect man,817.

Magi from the Eaſt, and Pilate from the Weſt,385.

Magiſtrates to warre againſt the wicked, 493.

Magnanimity what it is, 136, 201. The fruits of it, ibid. the magnanimity of the Primitive Chriſtians, ibid. the magnanimity of S. Peter,202.

Marcion his hereſie,819.

Macedonius his hereſie ibid.

Manichæus his hereſie,ibid.

Manhood of Chriſt ſeen by the ſufferings of Chriſt,821.

Word made fleſh, why the Evangeliſt ſaith, 833.

How one thing may be made another thing three waies,834.

Manhood of Chriſt how adored,841,&c.

Mary rightly called Θεότοκος, the mother of God, 843. Mary, of what tribe ſhe was, 850.

Matthew and Micah, how reconciled, touching the place of Chriſt his birth,856.

Magi what they believed Chriſt to be,859.

Man,of all creatures moſt ſubject to ſuffering,874.

Malice of Satan Chriſt prayed againſt, 897.

Malchus how he uſed Chriſt,904.

Maſters that are ill, make ill ſervants,ibid.

Malice of the Iewes againſt Chriſt, 937, 955.

Manner of Chriſts ſuffering incomprehenſible,947.

C. Marius unlearned,97. His cruelty,434.

Mary Magdalen whence ſo called, and what ſhe was,312,313. Her teares threefold, 318. Her vertues,320. Her bounty, &c. 321. Her infirmities,324,325.

Marriage of the High Prieſt, with whom forbidden,62.

Good maſters properties,227. maſters many ſpoile their ſchollers, 100. maſter of a houſe what he ought to care for, 502. Chriſt is a moſt bountifull Maſter,544.

Maxime of the world,414.

Mary Magdalen a ſinfull woman,962. How ſhe lived after her converſion, 965. Mary Magdalens, how many they were, 987. Why not not ſuffered to touch Chriſt, 987.

Magiſtrates, in what ſenſe to be feared, 969.
Manhood of Chriſt how ſaid to be every where, 973.
Martyrs, how conſtantly they profeſſed Chriſt, 992.
Manna had twelve wonders in it, 1083.

Me.

Meekneſſe, 100. How it differeth from patience, 101. The excellency of it, ibid. The benefits of it, ibid. Taught by nature, ibid. In Chriſt moſt excellent, 102. Threefold, 103. Like to what, ibid. Examples of it, 101. 102. Many circumſtances about it, 104, 105.
Men how weake, poore, and wicked, 57, 58.
Menenius Agrippa's parable, 504.
Members of Chriſt to be relieved, 157.
Memory how neceſſary for Divines, 374 How it may hurt us, ibid.
Meanes to preſerve peace of conſcience three, 511. To preſerve Eccleſiaſticall peace, 509. To find peace with God, 499. To preſerve peace among men, 500. meanes, God worketh with it, without it, by weak meanes, by unlikely means, and by contrary meanes, 452.
Meane things why choſen of God, 554.
Mercy of God, 184. What uſe we ſhould make of it. 298.
Merit no good, 17. But damnation, ibid Nothing at Gods hand, 554. All merit excluded, 469.
Mercy Gods chiefeſt attribute, &c. How great, 7, 14.
Mercury how painted, and why, 81. And the influence of this Planet, ibid.
Memory what an excellent faculty it is, 621. Wherein it excelleth all other faculties, ibid. God recommendeth all his benefits unto it, ibid. How defiled by ſin, ibid. How faithfull to record vaine and vile things, ibid.
How faithleſſe to retaine good things, 622.
What we ſhould alwaies remember, ibid.
Meditation of our death what it doth, 639.
Mediatours two ſorts, 787. Mediatour betwixt God and man, to be like God and like man, 861. Chriſt a perfect Mediatour, 817.
The ſame meaſure of effectuall grace muſt work the ſame effect in all men, 732.
Our meaning is accepted, where means are wanting, 745.
Meditation of Chriſts Paſſion what it effecteth, 866, &c. Moſt acceptable unto Chriſt, 866. Expelleth ſin, 867. Kindleth our love to God, 868. Supporteth our hope, 869.
The ſame meaſure of grace not given to all men, 1006.
Meanes to bring us to our end decreed as well as our end, 1052.
The Apoſtles received not the ſame meaſure of grace, 1059.
The ſame meaſure of fruits God expecteth not from all men, 1059.
Melchiſedech who he was, 807, &c. No inhabitant of Canaan, 808. That he was Jeſus Chriſt the Sonne of God in the ſhape of man, proved, 811, &c.
Memnons hereſie, 819.
Merit of Chriſts ſuffering how to be conſidered, 941.
All men of note under the old Teſtament types of Chriſt, 763.
To hope for mercy and to neglect Gods ſervice vaine preſumption, 1091. mercy and peace how they pleaded for man, 801. mercy in God what it ſignifieth, 714. mercy of God how it ſought Adam, and many more when they ſinned, 714, &c. It conſiſteth chiefly in three things, 715. It is everlaſting two wales, 718. The beſt ſtay to rely upon, 719 How it qualifieth puniſhments, ibid. Found in all places, and in all creatures, 720. mercy of God twofold, ibid. How God is onely merciſull to them that love him, 721. It proceedeth naturally from God, 725. How it pleadeth for ſinners, ibid. How largely it extendeth it ſelfe, 740. mercies of God innumerable and immeaſurable. ibid. Laſting for ever and ever. ibid. mercy of God teacheth us to be affraid to ſinne, 741. God more merciſull than we are ſinfull, 742. We ought to imitate God in the workes of mercy, 743. mercy how ſcarce among men, ibid. Works of mercy of two ſorts, 745. Motives to perſwade us to be merciſull, 746. Mercy makes us like to God, 746. Scarce amongſt us, ibid. That it is no mercy to ſpare wicked men, ibid.
Meſſias expected by the Gentiles, 799.

Mi.

Mind of one man what it doth more than another, 136. Reprobate mind, the ſignes thereof, 159.
Our Miniſters not to be abuſed, 386. Miniſters dignified in ſix reſpects, 386, 387. How they ſhould love their people, 422. fight and warre againſt the wicked, 492. They are our fathers, 535. Foure ſorts of them, 547. Their character indelible, ibid. The unworthy to be diſplaced, 548. Able Miniſters what a great gift, 1035. We ought to pray for our Miniſters, 1101 Miniſters ſubject to the greateſt miſeries, 627.
Great miſeries of mankind, 126. To be acknowledged, 169. All for our ſins, 193. The miſeries of our brethren ſhould move us to compaſſionate them, 317. Foure miſchiefs or miſeries impoſed on man for ſin, 532. The manifold miſeries of all ages, 627. Of infancy, ibid. Of childhood, ibid. Of youth, 628. Of manhood, ibid. Of old age, ibid. The miſeries of all eſtates, 629. Of the poore, ibid. Of the rich, 630. Of meane men, 631. Of the Nobility, ibid. Of the common people, ibid. Of the Magiſtrates, ibid. Of the Miniſters, 632. How Chriſt ſuffered all miſeries, 765.

Mo.

Chriſt how mocked upon the croſſe, 913.
The Monke that went to ſeeke for death, 168.
Moſes puniſhed for a ſmall ſin, 326. He only ſhewed Gods will, but could give no grace to performe it, 526.
Good motions not to be ſmothered, 152.

Our mortality alwaies to bee remembred, 314.
Two Mountaines of pride what they are, 113.

Mu.

How Christ multiplyed the loaves of bread, 710.
To murmur against God, what a hainous sin, 750.
Mulitors story, 225.
Murderers how odious, 38.

My.

Myſteries to whom revealed, 112.
Myſtery of clothing Christ in white explained, 907.
Myſtery of the Trinity, why not fully revealed at first, 772.
Myſteries of faith how farre past the reach of a naturall man, 620.

Na.

Name of Christ how excellent and ineffable, 199. Name of God ineffable, 352. Name of Ieſus how sweet, ibid. Not the same with Iehova nor the same with Ioſua, 353. Abstract names most proper to God, 353. Name of God abused two waies, good name to be sought, 498. To be joyned to a good conscience, ibid. Whence it springeth and how to obtaine it, 498. Our names should put us in minde of a godly life, 315. Abstract Names of all excellencies most proper unto God, 676. Iehova the essential name of God, 677 name of God taken two waies, 763. All names of dignity in the Old Testament types of Christ, 763.
Nature and good Christians content with a little, 513. Our Nature what it sheweth us to be, 514. Nature is wholy defiled, 181. 568. Nature can never procure the gifts of grace 623. Nature teacheth us to punish sin, 645. Nature not able to shew the reason how the world should be made, 686. The nature of all things good. 726. Nature relieveth the part most distressed, 894. To the nature of God what things are repugnant, 695. Two natures in our Saviour Christ, 830. & 204. Confirmed, 831. &c. By nature wee are alike indifferent to all sins, 730. Christ came from Nathan, and not from Salomon, 850.
Nazareth Christ not borne there, 356. A true Nazarite, 356. Nazarite what it signifieth, 356. That we ought all to be true Nazarites, 357. Nazianzens praise, 409.

Ne.

Negative precepts how many, 744.
Negligence loseth Christ, 323.
Neceſſity threefold, 935. How it was necessary for Christ to suffer, 936.
Newneſſe of life wherein it consisteth, 944.
Newtralists how base, 342.
Neſtorius his heresie, 836. Wherein he affirmed the union of the two natures of Christ to subsist 837. His heresie confuted, 837. &c. How he was deceived about the person of Christ, 1019.

Ni.

Nicodemus his excellencie in three things, 22.
Nitingale how it sleepeth, 124.
Nilus head unknowne to the Egyptians, 140
Christ borne in the Night time, and why, 855.

No.

Nominall relation of the three Persons of the Trinity maketh a true distinction of the persons, 775.
Novatus his heresie, 196. 660. Why hee thought sinnes of reciduation should not be pardoned, 1001.
Noveltie of the presbyterian government, 400

Nu.

Number of the Elect determined, 425. Number of Christs servants smale, 310. Of the wicked many, ibid.

Ob.

Obedience a speciall evidence of grace, 478. Foure properties of it, ibid. It is the chiefest honor we can shew to God, 539. Obedience like the heart, 141. Obedience of all creatures to Christ, 167. A most Obedient saying of a good Father, 167. Man most disobedient of all creatures, ibid. Obedience the onely thing that pleaseth God, 328.
Obſtacles of going to Christ especially foure, 76.
Obſtinacie the mischiefes thereof, 417.
Obſervations about the manner of his crucifying, 933.
Obſtinate sinners how hardly reclaimed, 902
Obedience of Christ seene in the incarnation of Christ. 827.
Objections of the Arrians against the eternall God-head of Christ answered, 780. &c.

Of.

Foure things Offered to God, 264. We offer our selves three waies, 265.
We Offend God for trifles, 654.
Offences of two sorts, 285. All to be forgiven, ibid.
Officers not to be made, but of the best and godliest men. 657.
Office of the Word to declare the minde of God, 803.
What we should offer unto Christ, 861.

OL.

Old age described, and the miseries thereof, 618.

Om.

Omniſcience cannot be communicated to any creature, 697.

On.

One ſinne brings death, 604.

Op.

Opinion like a great Monarch, 297. Loſeth Chriſt, 324. Muſt not be the ground of our faith, 324.

Oppreſſing our rites and ceremonies, what miſchiefe it did, 404. Oppreſſing the poore what a fearefull ſin, 750.

To oppoſe the known truth what a horrible ſin, 750.

The evill that oppreſſeth man is fourefold, 802.

Or.

Order of Melchiſedech more excellent than the order of Aaron, 551.

Originall corruption how traduced, 569. Hard to be expreſſed, 570.

Order obſerved by God in all things, 804.

Orpheus how he loſt his wife, 205.

Pa.

HOw painfull to walk in the wayes to hell, 651.

Chriſt made paſſible, the firſt degree of his paſſion, 876.

Patience and mercy of God ſhewed by two paſſages of Scripture, 725. patience neceſſary to retaine the truth, 737.

No ſinner excluded from hope of pardon, 741.

Good parents leave the beſt patrimony unto their children, 740.

Chriſt the perfect patterne of all vertue, 765.

Paſſions of man, how they invade him, will he, nill he, but not Chriſt, 890.

Meditation of Chriſts paſſion, what it effecteth, 866. Cauſe of paſſions twofold, 890. paſſions of man, how they blind and diſtract him, but not Chriſt. 890, 891.

Our parents never to be forgotten, 924.

All the particulars of Chriſt his paſſions impoſſible to be expreſſed. 915.

Patience in ſuffering, more reſpected of God than our ſuffering, 945, &c. patience, what an excellent gift, 1052. patience twofold, ibid.

Chriſt ſet us downe a perfect patterne of prayer, 1091.

Pe.

Chiefeſt perfection of man conſiſteth in the will of man, 617.

Perplexities of the wicked at their death time, 638.

A moſt earneſt perſwaſion to forſake ſinne, 643.

God a faithfull performer of all his promiſes, 227, 827.

Each Perſon of the Trinity a true Iehova, 677.

Three Perſons in the one eſſence of God, 772. The three Perſons of the Trinity diſtinguiſhed two waies, 773. Perſon of Chriſt, how alwaies abuſed by Satan and all hereticks, 792. What is true of the Perſon of Chriſt, is not alwaies true, being reſtrained to the body of Chriſt, 819.

Chriſt conceived a perfect man in the firſt moment of his conception, 815. Chriſt was in all reſpects a perfect man, 817

Peters infirmities manifold, 905. Why ſuffered to fall, ibid. How reſtored by Chriſt, ibid.

Perſecutors of Chriſt how plagued, 993.

Petition of the theefe on the Croſſe, how ſoone granted, 920.

People, how they deſired the death of Chriſt, 937.

Perſon of Chriſt, how excellent he was, 941.

Peace twofold, 489. Imperfect peace threefold, ibid. Chriſt made our peace with God, 490. peace with men of diverſe kinds, ibid. peace of conſcience, what it is, 491. The accurſed peace of the wicked, 493. The excellency of each kind of peace, 497. peace with God, procured by three meanes, 499. peace with men how to be preſerved, 500. peace betwixt man and wife, 500, 501. How they may live at peace, ibid. peace in a family how to be preſerved, 501, 502 peace in a common-wealth how to be procured, 502. peace procured by five things, 505. To be ſued for, 506. peace how to be preſerved among all nations, 507. Loved of all good men, 508. And of all godly men, ibid. What doth preſerve it, ibid. Eccleſiaſticall peace how preſerved, 509. peace like a pilgrim, 511. God the Authour of each kind of peace, 517. peace what it is, 523. Offered by God, 14. How ratified by the ancients, 18. The women how peaceably they came to the grave, 958. peace the badge of Gods children, ibid. peace, what an excellent thing it is, 1082.

Men eaſier won by perſwaſion, than by compulſion, 1078.

People to what naturally inclined, 1080.

People, why they love neither Kings nor Prieſts, 371.

How obſtinate and impudent ſome people be, 382.

What they cannot do to the Preachers, 388.

Their practice and inconſtancy, 396.

How they deale with their Preachers, 510.

What they ſhould do, 511.

Ph.

Philip King of Macedons practice, 314. His meeknesse, 102. Philip King of Macedon, what he required of the Athenians, 1033.

Philosophers, foure sects, and their opinions of happinesse, 69. What some of them thought of our miseries, 127. Philosophy, what it teacheth, 97.

Philosophers saw and confessed the blindnes and ignorance of men. 620.

Philosophers wonderfull diligent to seek out all knowledge, 798.

Phrases of being able and not able, how understood, 699.

Phrases true of us not true in the same sense of Christ, 830.

Pi.

Piety of the Primitive Christians, 395.

Piety increaseth piety, ibid.

How little practised in every place, 220.

Pictures, how farre lawfull, 458.

Pilates vertues seene in three things, 362. His vices, 364. His injustice seen five wayes, 364, &c. His timidity, 367. His hypocrisie, 368. His infidelity, ibid. His constancy. 391. His unconstancy. 392.

Pilates wife, how she justified Christ, 909.

Pilate how incensed against Christ, 906. How cruelly he handleth him, 909. How urged by a threefold argument to crucifie him, 910. Why he condemned him, 911. Sinners chiefly to be pitied, 745.

Pilate what he writ to Tiberius of Christ his resurrection, 992.

Pl.

Place where Christ was borne, Bethlehem, and why, 856.

A placable man is gracious, 722.

Mercy how it pleadeth for sinners, 725.

Plato and his followers, what they thought of the word Christ, 797.

Fittest place to pray is the Church, 1087.

Place whence Christ raised himselfe, both in respect of his body and soule, 994.

Place from whence and into which Christ ascended, 1020, 1021, &c.

Playes and play houses, the great abuse of them, 220. playes where Kings and Princes are, not so full of abuses as others, 220.

Po.

Pomegranates the symbole of good works, 459.

Our power, wherein it standeth, 85.

Power of God shewed, 14.

The same not to be usurped, 155.

Pompeys resolution, 94.

Poverty of men, 57.

Poverty the bane of learning, 408.

Poore need not feare the frownes of fortune, 114.

Poverty an intolerable burden, 629.

Knowledge of Gods power the foundation of our faith, 684.

How needfull it is, 684.

Power and authority not the same, 689.

Power twofold, ibid.

Passive power what it is, ibid.

Active power of God what it is, and how manifold, ibid.

Atheists deny the power of God, 685.

Denied by Philosophers, 685.

Power of God proved, ibid.

By the creation of the world, ibid.

By the government of the world, 686.

By Scripture, 699.

By the works of God, 700.

How it appeared at all times, ibid.

How extolled by the Fathers, ibid.

By the Heathens. 701.

Confest by the divels, ibid.

Power why ascribed to the Father, 773.

Power of God chiefly seen in forgiving sins, 687.

Power of every creature is a received power, and limited, 689.

Power of God considered two waies, 690.

The proper power of each Person, ibid.

The common power of God, ibid.

Power of God so proper to God, that it cannot be communicated to any creature, ibid.

Power of God absolute in three respects, 691.

Ordinary power of God guided by the decree and will of God, 692.

Gods absolute power proved, 692, &c.

How farre it extendeth, 694.

Diversly answered, 694, &c.

Power of God a great comfort to the godly, 712.

Preserveth the Saints from sin, 712.

It should terrifie the wicked, 713.

Power of serving God not taken away from us by God, 733.

Perfect power most requisite for Preachers, 1032, &c.

Our posterity perpetuated by our serving of God, 851.

Pr.

Prayer of Christ on the crosse, how effectuall, 919.

What Christ prayed against, 897.

Prayers made unto Christ, 780.

Prayer the best meanes to obtaine the graces of God, 335.

Mentall prayer not alwaies sufficient, ibid.

The power of prayer, ibid.

Why we pray for the reprobate, 427.

The prayers of the Saints why somtimes denied, 483.

Why deferred to be heard, 484. 1094.

Prayer increaseth our faith, 500.

Procureth grace and peace, 526.

Prayer a sweet sacrifice,

How our prayers should be made, 559.

Prayer of two kinds, 1081.

Prayer in respect of the forme manifold, 1085.

That we should pray to none but God, 1087.

Every where, ibid.

Prayer twofold, 1089.

We

Wee ſhould alwaies pray in heart, 1089. How we ought to pray in humility, in faith, 1091, &c. When we pray, we ſhould cleanſe our ſelves from all ſin, 1093.

Prayer an eſſentiall part of Gods worſhip, ibid. The chiefeſt part of Gods ſervice, 1097. How availeable for men, 1094. To obtaine whatſoever we aſk, more than we aſk, better than we aſk, 1094, 1095, &c. How powerfull it is, 1096. This only prevaileth with God, and appeaſeth his wrath, ibid. The chiefeſt of all Gods gifts and graces, 1098. We ought to pray in proſperity as well as in adverſity, 1099 We ought to pray for all men, ibid.

That we ſhould practiſe what we know to be good, 1005. practiſe only proveth us Chriſtians, ibid.

Praiſe of Nazianzen, 459.

Prayer, the benefit of it, 36. The chiefeſt meanes to overcome all our enemies, 332. Being made as it ought, it is never denied, 137. To pray not to Saints, but to God alone, 289, 554.

Preaching mightily hated by Satan, 153. We ought not to preach our ſelves, 154. What Preachers the people like beſt of in theſe daies, ibid. Whom we ought to heare, ibid. preaching carped at, what miſchiefe it doth, 171. Preachers to live upon benevolence not good, 451. Preachers why they have need of patience more than others, 240. That they ought to preach in life and doctrine, 459. To preaching foure things do belong, 398. Preachers ſhould excell in ſanctity, 458. That we ought to preach often, though but the ſame Sermon, 325. Preachers what they ſhould do, 511.

Precepts of God what they ſhew to us, 185. Precept of Chriſt how eaſie, 91.

Deſire of preferment bewitcheth many, 279.

Preſence of God what it ſhould teach both the wicked and the godly, 58. Bodily preſence of Chriſt not needfull for us, 157 preſence of Chriſt, 142. And what it teacheth us, 143.

Vaine preſumption like ſand in foure reſpects, 298. What it is, 478.

Preachers charge how great it is, 1102, &c. Their ſtate how dangerous, 1103. Preachers, why hated of all men, 874. Preachers, three ſorts of them, 738. How wickedly many of them do live, 738. And how zealouſly many of them do live, 739.

Predictions concerning the Meſſias all accompliſhed in Chriſt, 947.

Preſence of the Angels ſhould preſerve us from ſin, 1006, &c. No perſonall preſence of Chriſt to be expected before the day of judgement, 975.

God can preſerve his ſervants in the midſt of the wicked, 1054

Prerogatives of Kings not to be too narrowly pryed into, 417. prerogatives of Chriſtians above the Angels, and above the Patriarchs and Prophets, 537. Vide 59, 60.

Our preſervation. 10.

Prerogatives of the bleſſed Virgin in bearing Chriſt, 815.

Preſervation from plagues not to be aſcribed to chance, 731.

Preſervation from ſinne is from God, 730.

Pride how it ſpoileth many a one, 1013. How every houſe is full of it, 827. pride the cauſe of contention, 504. and of ſchiſmes, 403. the pride of mans nature, 216. pride the cauſe why the Iewes rejected Chriſt, 386. How heavy it is, 127. The worſt pride, 109. pride what a ſawcy companion it is, 110. proud men degraded, 108.

Prieſts and Kings in greateſt danger, 370. Prieſts in worſe place than the Prince, 371. Prieſts and Kings ſhould love one another, 371. Prieſts ſhould not be one againſt another, 372. How provided for by Ioſeph and the Egyptians, 414. How Chriſt was annointed to bee a Prieſt, 551. Quality of Chriſts Prieſthood, ibid. Chriſt why made a Prieſt, 552. Prieſts required to be more holy than all others, 264. Why God regardeth them and their prayers more than others, ibid How they are diſreſpected, ibid. That they ſhould not be timerous, 367. Nor ſilent for feare of danger, 368. Chriſt a Prieſt, 46. High Prieſt whom he might not marie, 62. Prieſts to be made of the beſt men, 657. High Prieſts did what they could to hinder the reſurrection of Chriſt, 984 Every Prieſt ſhould be perfect in all parts, 817. Prieſts either the beſt or the worſt men. 899.

Price of our ranſome is the bloud of Chriſt, 940, &c.

Princes cares, 370.

Printing, the great benefit of it, 377. The firſt inventors of it, 437.

Providence of God how admirable, 856, &c. providence of God diſpoſeth all things, 686.

Proceeding of Chriſt in judgement how terrible, 12.

Outward profeſſors termed Saints, 463. Luke-warme profeſſours hated of God, 322, 340.

Promiſe of God how coditionall, 483. The ſame twofold, ibid. Evill promiſes not to be performed, 409.

Prophets that are wicked underſtand not their owne Propheſies, 384. Prophets whether they were annointed, 550. Chriſt a Prophet, 556. & 46. His Prophetical office, three parts of it, 556.

Gods promiſes ſhould never be doubted, 681. Gods promiſe touching the incarnation of the Word, 762.

To be proud of goodneſſe the worſt pride in the world, 1014.

Providence to fore-ſee things, what an excellent gift, 1051. The boundleſſe goodneſſe of Gods providence, 762. providence of God, providing afore-hand to preſerve us from hereticks, 822, &c.

Properties of true grace three, 477. Foure properties of true obedience, 479. Two properties of fire, 530. Foure properties of a Lord, 543. properties cannot paſſe their owne ſubjects, 697, &c. properties of each nature of Chriſt how indifferently predicated of the whole perſon of Chriſt, 842. properties of the manhood how aſcribed to the Godhead, ſo properties of the Godhead how aſcribed to the manhood,842,843.

Prosperity a grievous yoke,92. The danger of it,301. Some serve God the better in it, 397. And they are the worser sort of men, 398.
Proud Pharisees and their fearefull estate, 341.
A proverbe, 437.
Proverbe of the Spaniards,23,225.
Proverbe of the Italians,81.
Providence of God,212,213. providence of fathers for their children,538.

Pu.

Publike sinnes are double sinnes, 593. publike sinners are publikely to testifie their repentance,624. publikely to be punished, 603. publike prayers, how dangerous to neglect them, 1090. They should never be missed, ibid.
Punishment, what it is, 524. It declares Gods justice,ibid. God punisheth three wayes, 151,152. punishment of the old world,9. Heturian punishment, 127. & 129. To punish sin a most just thing,645. God punisheth only things done,650. No man for the sinnes he never did,649. punishment should be answerable to the offence, 656. punishment of sinne should make us to forsake sin,625. Christ undertook the punishment of all others,892. punishment, how qualified by Gods mercies,719, &c. punishment of the damned qualified by Gods mercies,720. Once inflicted, never mitigated,ibid. How slow God is to punish sinne, 724. Act of punishment least agreeable to Gods nature, ibid. God is compelled to punish, 725. Our punishment often suspended by the goodnesse of God,728. God will punish sinners,752,&c. Wicked men shall be punished in their childrē 753 How this punishment may stand with Gods justice, 753. punishment either corporall or spirituall,755. Godly often punished in the corporall punishment of the wicked,755,&c. Humane lawes do often punish the children for the parents faults, ibid. punishment spirituall and eternall differ, 756. The punishment of Christ was imposed on him by God,and why,938.
All men not fit for all purposes,1006.
Judas why made purse-bearer,898.
Not the purity of the Virgin,but the working of the Holy Ghost caused Christ to be conceived without sin,816.

Qu.

THe quality of sin according to the quality of the offender,604.
Curious questions not to be discussed,1023. question of Christ explaned,202.

Ra.

RAge of the Iewes against the dead corps of Christ,914.
Rainebow before the floud,3.
What it naturally signifieth,14. Why put in the cloud,ibid.
Rashnesse, what a mischiefe,391.
A Rabbi's observation,501.
Raine signifieth prosperity,4.
Christ only raised himselfe from the dead, 978.
The ransome of that Christ paid for us, what and how great it was,552.

Re.

Reading, the diversity of some readings, 212.
Reliques of Saints meere forgeries,458.
Rebellion how odious, 183. Not to rebell against wicked kings,558.
Reformation of manners totall, 194.
Remedy to prevent destruction twofold, 187.
Revolters from Christ, the three chiefest sorts, 224 Revolters in the Primitive Church, 397. Revolters never were true members of Christ,488.
Why God revealeth some things,314.
Resurrection of Christ the chiefest cause of our joy,326.
No reprobate can be saved, 426. Decree of reprobation what it is, 427. Reprobate why we pray for,ibid.
Refractory men to be disciplined and silenced,405,406. What want and miseries they would have brought upon our Church,407.
The regenerate consisteth of a double man, 481. Of themselves can do no good,515.
Rewards of God rendered most justly,456.
Religion not the worse for the scoffs of the wicked,448.
Redemption made foure waies, 552.
Relieve the poore,most acceptable to God, 560.
The reward of the Ministers,387. Our reward not to be expected till the end of our service,544. The heavenly reward how great, 546.
Regenerate men have a double being,571.
Repentance the best means to revive our dying soules,615. Repentance killeth sin,639.
God no respecter of persons,646.
God easie to be reconciled,722,&c.
Men cannot repent when they will,571.
Christ would not reveale himselfe unto the world all at once, 763.
Certaine resemblances of the Trinity seene in the creatures,773.
Christ, how he reconcileth us to himselfe, 788.
How the word God resembleth our outward and inward word,794.
God revealed many things concerning himselfe to the Gentiles, 797. The divels revealed many things concerning God to the Gentiles,and why,798. Christ would not reveale his servants shame,904.
Rejection of the Iewes grieved Christ, 895.
Regeneration not needfull unto Christ,831.
To receive the outward Sacraments, and not the grace of the Sacraments, is nothing worth,1067.
Hereticks receive neither Christ, nor the Sacraments

Sacraments of Christ, ibid.

Worthy receivers of the Sacraments receive Christ, and all his graces, ibid. We may receive Christ without the Sacraments, 1066.

Repentance onely in this life, 7. Not repenting the cause of our destruction, 187. Repentance, the nature of it. 187. The fruits of it, ibid. The largeneſſe of it, 188. Not ſufficient alone to ſave us, ibid. How men put it off, 189. Parts of it, 190. The particulars in the repentance of Iudas, 191. Signes of repentance principally three, 194. Repentance of S. Peter made him more glorious than he was before he ſinned, 203. Repentance an acceptable ſacrifice unto God, 56.

Reſt, the excellency of it, 117. Conſidered two wayes, ibid. Reſt in a fourefold reſpect, 120. That it is fourefold, 121. The divels reſt in whom, ibid The divine reſt threefold, Angelicall reſt what it is, 121. Reſt of God and ſanctifying the day of his reſt, how expounded by S Auguſtine, 122. Reſt brought to us two wayes, 133. Reſt of the ſoule how excellent, 125. Reſt of God in Chriſt three wayes, 122. Eternall reſt, 125. Humane reſt threefold, 123 Reſt of the ſoule, three conditions of it, ibid. No reſt to a ſinner, 124. No reſt but in God, ibid. Reſt the deſire of all things, 346. What it is, and how excellent, 347. No true reſt in this world, ibid. Prepared for the Saints, 348. Onely found in God, ibid. By Chriſt, 349.

Requeſt of the thiefe how ſoone granted, 921.

What ſmall things God requireth of us, 65.

To relie on God in afflictions how ſafe, 933.

Redemption fourefold, 940.

To redeem us, how dearely it coſt, ibid.

Our redemption parallelleth our creation, 42

Reſurrection of Chriſt ſhewed by the Angell, 972. Reſurrection of Chriſt manifeſteth the conqueſt of Satan, deliverance of men, and Chriſt to have overcome all his enemies, 978. Reſurrection of Chriſt the third day foreſhewed, 979. How aſcribed to each Perſon of the Trinity, ibid. Reſurrection of Chriſt the third day confirmeth our faith in foure reſpects, 980. Certainty of Chriſts Reſurrection ſhewed in his riſing the third day, 981. Reſurrection of Chriſt the third day is a patterne of our condition, 982 Reſurrection of Chriſt ſought to be hindered by the high Prieſts, 984. Reſurrection of Chriſt believed of us for three reſpects, 986. Proved many waies, 986, &c. Reſurrection of Chriſt a patterne to teach us how to riſe from ſin, 997. A cauſe of great joy, 1003, &c. An aſſurance of our reſurrection to eternall life, 1004. Reſurrection of Chriſtians twofold, 997.

Relapſing or often falling into the ſame ſinnes how dangerous, 1002.

Ri.

Riches have deſtroyed many men, and what evill they do, 630. Riches or poverty whether beſt, 631. No man truly rich, 770. Chriſt truly rich, 779.

God loveth righteouſneſſe, 646. The more righteous we be, the more ſubject to be afflicted, 874.

Chriſt to riſe againe for three reaſons, 977. Typicall teſtimonies that Chriſt ſhould riſe the third day, 979. Chriſt himſelfe ſhewed that he ſhould riſe the third day, 979, &c. To riſe from the dead, greater than to deſcend from the Croſſe, 984. We ſhould riſe truly from ſin, and from all ſinnes, 1000.

The Righteous not called by Chriſt, 72.

In what ſence underſtood, ibid.

Phariſees Righteouſneſſe hinders us to Chriſt, 79.

Riches what they are and how they pierce our heads, bones and heart, 81. What they have done to many, 413. Riches how they vaniſh from us, 297.

Rich men love not to ſerve God much, 398 Riches are good, 518.

Who is truly Rich, 555.

Right of ſoveraignty not taken away by diſobedience, 544.

Rimes againſt the lazie Fryers, 410.

Rivalls not to bee endured in what wee deerely love, 216.

A Righteous man may be made more righteous and how, 546.

Rites and ceremonies, 401.

Rites and ceremonies how Chriſt eaſed us from them, 130. Multiplicity of them in Saint Auguſtine and his complaints againſt them, 130. The evill of too many of them, ibid.

Beſt Righteouſneſſe inherent cannot juſtifie us, 288.

A Righteouſneſſe fulfilled for us, 545.

Ro.

Roſſenſis his parable to Henry the eight, of the axe that came to the trees for a handle, 999.

Romanes practiſe when they denounced warre, 2. Their practiſe about their gods, 423.

Rome the antiquity of it, 433. The iniquitie of it, 434.

Rhodians happineſſe, 10. What the people thought of them, 149.

Ropes of Adam what they are, 151.

Chriſt is the Rocke in three reſpects, 304.

Runagadoes, 396.

Rumors three ſorts, 216.

Sa.

Sacraments a moſt excellent means to beget grace, 1065 They ſhew all that the Scriptures teach, 1066.

Every ſacrifice ſhould be perfect, 817.

Sacriledge what a fearefull ſin, 750, &c.

Saints preſerved from ſinne by the power of God, 712. More glorious in adverſity than proſperity, 731. They alwaies prayed to Chriſt, 780. Saints at their death ſupported by God, 891, &c.

Sabbath how highly eſteemed among the Rabbins, 256.

Salvation twofold, 50.
Sands, foure properties of it, 192.
Sanctity twofold, 455. Vaine ſanctity, what it is like, 465.
Satan, when he laugheth, 511. How he pleads againſt the wicked, 13.
Satisfaction what it is, 191. The ſatisfaction of Iudas, how remarkable, ibid.
Sawce of the Paſchall Lambe, what it was, 260.
Saved how we are, 533. To ſave whom Chriſt came, 49. Saved whether God would have all men, 423. Chriſt is our ſole and perfect Saviour, 546.
Saying of the ſeven wiſe men, 42. Faithfull ſaying what it is, 43. Sayings worthy in Scripture, ſpecially foure, ſo termed, 44. Foure kinds of ſayings, ibid.
Saints, why they are compared to a cloud, 18. Saints whether they pray for us, 289. And how farre, ibid. Not to be prayed unto, ibid. Their examples to be imitated, 321. Like doves in three reſpects, 343. They ſhould be wiſe, 344. Their deſires, ibid. What they ſhould do in afflictions, 437. Saints how diſtinguiſhed from others, 455. Saints in heaven not to be contemned, 458. Why to be honoured, ibid. All Chriſtians Saints in a threefold reſpect, 460. They are Saints that have their ſinnes remitted, that are penitents, that believe in Chriſt, ibid. Beſt Saints had imperfections, 461. Former Saints what they did, ibid. Their fals why recorded, 462. Many ſorts of faigned Saints, 463, 464. Saints ſhould avoid the ſociety of the wicked, 539. How dearely they ſhould love one another, 540. To bee loved better than ſinners, 540. They delight in Gods law, and rejoyce in their ſufferings, 133. Saints may dwell among the wicked, 435. What many of them have been, 436. Their condition and afflicted ſtate, ibid. They are chiefly to be loved, 447. Faithfull in heaven moſt properly Saints, 457. Saints departed too much honoured by the Papiſts, 457. True Saints ſinne not, in what ſenſe ſaid, 481. They in heaven pray againſt the wicked, 495. They pray for the Church, 554. Not to be ſued unto, 554.
Salomon ſpeaketh of a twofold generation of Chriſt, 782. His words, the Lord created me, how underſtood, ibid Salomons poſterity for his ſins was finiſhed in Iechonias, 851.
Salvation, how we ought to thirſt after it, 933. ſalvation by none but by Chriſt. 940, &c
Rabbi Samuel, what he ſaith concerning Chriſt, 993.
Sanctification, what it is, 732.
Samoſatenian hereſie, 830.
Satan, how ſaid to aſcend, 1013. He lifteth up the wicked to deſtroy them, 1014 His ſubtilty to deceive the people, 1035. He ought to be ſpied before he comes too neare us, 587. He is the father of ſin, 588. He ſuggeſteth ſin diverſe waies, 586. He laboureth to conceal the light either of preaching or of applying Gods Word, 591. How he handleth the wicked at the time of their death, 638. He cannot doe what he would, 712. How he alwaies labour-eth to vilifie the perſon of Chriſt, 792. His inſolency againſt Chriſt, 803. His envy againſt Chriſt, and why, 936, &c.
Without ſatisfaction no ſinne can be pardoned, 702.

Sc.

Holy Scripture wholly true, 735. The beſt warrant for all Preachers, 1011. Scriptures, the honourable titles of them, 153. Their eloquence, wherein it conſiſteth, ibid. The excellency and elegancy of it, 229. Abuſed, 378. How come to be the ſheepes cloathing, ibid. How deep they be, 379. How ventured upon by the ignorant, ibid. To be tranſlated, and when they began to be tranſlated, 380. Not underſtood by all, 381. Seeming repugnant, ibid How farre the people ought to uſe them, 382. Scriptures when put in the cloud, 5. The antiquity of them, 376.
Schiſmes, 10. The cauſes of them, 403.
Schoolemaſters three very ill, 99.
Scourging of Chriſt, how grievous it was, 909.
Chriſt how ſcoffed upon the croſſe, 913.

Se.

To ſearch too farre into Gods eſſence is not ſafe, 678.
Sentence of the wicked how dreadfull, 13.
Seneca's practice, 80.
Sepulcher of Chriſt, why the divell would keep all men from it, 313, 314. Thirteene memorable things in it, 314. And what they teach us, 315.
Separatiſts condemned, 435.
Sermon how to be compoſed, 459.
Servants of God how uſed, 241. The idle ſervant is hated of the divell, and is good for no man, 78. ſervants how to be choſen, 502.
Seed of the parents, the ſubſtance of the whole man, 817. ſeed of the man, whether it falleth into the ſubſtance of the child, ibid.
God ſeeking after us ſhould make us to ſeeke for him, 715.
God not to be ſeene with any materiall eye, 666. We ſhall not ſee Gods eſſence in heaven, but in the face of Ieſus Chriſt, 667.
All men are ever ſeeking ſome thing, 959. Godly men ſeeke onely for God, 960. Many ſeeke him amiſſe, ibid. How we ought to ſeeke for Chriſt, 557, 960, &c. That we cannot ſeeke for God, untill God doth ſeeke for us, 963. Why the wicked ſeeke not God, ibid.
Senſitive faculty ſoon defileth the reaſonable ſoule, 590.
Chriſt not ſent by way of command, 790.
Seneca what he ſaid, 624.
Sentence of Chriſt his condemnation, 911.
Senate of Rome loath to derogate from the worth of Auguſtus, 942.
To ſerve ſin a moſt grievous ſlavery, 594.
Servetus his hereſie, 819.
To ſerve God, the greateſt good that we can do unto our children, 757. It procureth all bleſſings to us, 683.
Not to ſerve God heapeth all plagues upon us, 683.

We

We were redeemed and preſerved that wee might ſerve him, 682. &c. It is the onely way to perpetuate our poſterities, 851.

Late ſervice God will hardly accept, and why, 998, &c.

The ſeaven words of Chriſt upon the Croſſe, 916.

Sh.

Shameſull handling of Chriſt how it grieved him, 894.

Shame of ſin caſt off, we are almoſt paſt hope of goodneſſe, 593.

Shedding of mans blood, what a heavie ſin, 750.

Shepherds why firſt informed of the birth of Chriſt, 859.

Sheepe their properties, 255.

Shortneſſe of our life what it worketh, 134.

Si.

Sight of ſin is no ſinne, 589.

Sickneſſe of the ſoule, how worſe then the ſickneſſe of the body, 623.

A ſigne why given by Iudas, 900.

Signes how we may know whether we be aſcended any thing towards heaven or not, 1026. &c Signe what it is, 15. Three ſorts of them, ibid. And they confirme Gods love, ibid. Signes of a reprobate minde, 159. Vniverſall ſignes not alwaies univerſally underſtood, 273. Signes whereby effectuall grace is diſcerned, 454.

Sin the bitter fruits of it, 183. The miſchiefe of it, 184. The cauſe of our miſeries 187. 193 Sins of omiſſion how dangerous, great ſins greatly to be repented of, 188, 313. Sins cauſe of death, 104. Three degrees of ſinning, 313. The leaſt ſin not ſuffered in Gods deereſt ſervants, 326. Sins aggravated by circumſtances, 357. Sinne ſpoyleth all our vertues, 369. Crying ſins foure, 412 Why compared to a ſerpent, 416. The waight of it, 416. Sinne and grace how they may ſtand together, 485. Five degrees of ſinning, ibid. What ſins cannot ſtand with grace, ibid. Sin committed three waies 485. How far it may indanger us, 488. How it aſſaulteth us, 500. Leaſt ſins to be avoided, 511. Sin conſidered three waies, 521. Three things conſidered in ſin, ibid. Sin how dreadfull, 12. It ſtops the progreſſe of grace, 73. It was the cauſe of all Chriſt his ſufferings, 32. How terrible it is againſt us, 53. What a tyrant it is 87. Sins of the Iſraelites, 158. Signes of a faithfull teacher, 904.

Similies expreſſing how the Word alone aſſumed our fleſh, 805. A ſimile of Damaſcus and Theodorus, ſhewing how the two natures of Chriſt though united, doe remaine inconfuſed, 845. Sin is ſo ougly that at the firſt the ſinner himſelfe would faine conceale it, 591. To be reſiſted at the firſt, 594 &c. It blindeth us, that we cannot perceive its ouglineſſe, 607. At laſt it tormenteth the conſciences of all ſinners, 607. How ougly and loathſome it is, 613 Every ſin payeth the ſame wages, 613. Sins the diſeaſes of the ſoule, 623. It extinguiſheth all knowledge of God, 523. Sin of man in many things more hainous then the ſin of Satan, 655 The cauſe of all our miſeries, 659. What it is, 704. In every ſin two things to be conſidered, 704. Sinne and death indiſſolubly linked together, 565. Sin the roote of death, 567. How farre it ſpread it ſelfe, 565. Sinne originall or actuall, 567. Sin to have any thoughts of ſin, 587. Actuall ſin what it is, 583. Not a meere privation, 583. An erring from Gods will, 584. How it creepeth ſecretly and inſenſibly, like a Serpent, 586. 592. How it increaſeth inwardly and outwardly, 586. Not reſiſted, how it will neceſſarily increaſe more and more, 594. Sin is inwardly increaſed three waies, 586. Sin ſome way voluntary, or no ſin, 589. Sinne outwardly increaſeth foure waies, 591. It is compared unto a witch, 612. It brought on man a treble death, 614. Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, what it is, 748. Sinne irremiſſible three waies, 762. No ſinne ſo great but God can forgive it; 742. Sins not traduced from the parents unto the children, 754. Sinners not the children of God, 539. Their miſerable ſtate, ibid. Two ſorts of ſinners, 50. Our ſins drew Chriſt to be incarnate, 800. Sin expelled by the meditation of Chriſt his Paſſion, 867. Our ſinnes crucified Ieſus Chriſt, 438. Sinne brought feare into the world, 970. The more ſinneſull wee are, the more we ought to feare, ibid. Sin ought ſpeedily to be forſaken for two reaſons 999. Sinners how they condemne God to juſtifie themſelves 596. Sinners all, excepting Chriſt, 565. No ſinner excluded from hope of pardon 741. Three ſiſters of the deſtinie ſignifie God, 796.

Sk.

Skirts of Chriſt who they be, 557.

Sl.

Slaughter of Chriſtians, 119.

Slander how he maintaineth himſelfe, and what miſchiefe he doth, 169.

Sleepe what it doth to us, 123. Why given to us, ibid. The proper time of it, ibid.

God how ſlow to revenge, 724.

Sm.

Small things ſuffered, do grow great & do much hurt, 607. Small ſins ought to be reſiſted, 607. What a ſmall matter it was that God commanded Adam, 650. What a ſmall matter it is that God requireth of us, 650. &c.

So.

Chriſt the Sonne of God, not as we are the Sonnes of God. 784. The Sonne why made fleſh rather then the Father or the Holy Ghoſt, 803.

Sorrowes and ſufferings of Chriſt, exceeded all other ſorrowes, 916. Sorrow is twofold, 825.

Soule whether traduced from the parents, 569, &c. Not created from the beginning, 570 Not created as God infuſeth them, 570. Soule the ſeate of ſin, 571. Soule immortall yet hath a kinde of death, 615. Soules diſeaſes what they be, 623. That Chriſt had a true humane reasonable ſoule,821. Soule of Chriſt after it parted from the body deſcended into the place of the damned,995.1018.

Society naturall for us to deſire it,
Solifidians reproved,308.
Sonne of God what manner of one,33. For whom given,35.God hath many ſons,34.
Soule the image of God,67. That it is immortall,ibid.

Sp.

Spaniards proverbe,23.
Speech twofold,42.
Spirit of God like fire in a ſtill,185. Hee worketh two waies,486.The fruits of the ſpirit,476.
God ſpareth none for his greatneſſe if they offend him,605. He ſpareth the wicked for good mens ſake,720.
We ought to ſpare no coſt to get the truth, 736. To ſpare wicked men is not good,746.
That we ſhould ſpeake nothing but truth, 740.
Examples of ſpitefull ſinners,601. How fearefull is their ſtate,601.
Spirituall and eternall puniſhment how they differ,756.

St.

State of the wicked how lamentable, 13 330.
State-buſineſſe how warily to be treated of, 507.
Story of two gentlemen that wanted ſervice 221.Another memorable ſtory,455. Story of the Mulitor,225. Of the wiſe and fooliſh traveller,225. Story of him that failed in his Lords prayer, 560. Of the lady lie and truth, 285.
Stormes of the Church,436.&c.
Strength what it doth,52.
Our ſtate in Chriſt better then that which we loſt in Adam,829.
Starre of Chriſt ſpoken of by the Gentiles, 858.&c. What time it appeared,460. What effects it wrought in the Magi,460.
Chriſt why he ſtayed ſo long before he came 852.
Why he would not ſtay any longer,852.
Iudas why made ſteward, 898.&c.

Su.

Subſcription juſtified,401.
Humble ſubmiſſion procureth peace,505.
Chriſt of the ſame ſubſtance with his Father,785.Made of the ſubſtance of his Mother, 818.
How ſubtilly Satan deales with men to make them bold to ſin, then to deſpaire,606.
Chriſt ſuffered all miſeries,765.
Who moſt ſubject to ſufferings,874.
Chriſt ſuffered both in ſoule and body,876.
His firſt degree of ſuffering was to be made paſſible,876.
Conſideration of Chriſt his ſufferings moſt admirable,877.The ſufferings of Chriſt before his Iudges,903. The grievous ſufferings after he was condemned by the high Prieſt, 906.Sufferings of them that came to Chriſt, 118.
God ſuffereth nothing againſt his will,512.
What Chriſt ſuffered,440.545.
We ſuffer many things that we doe not approve,555.
Sufferings of Chriſt how alone ſufficient to ſatisfie for all ſins,941.Sufferings of the Saints how they do profit the Church,942.Sufferings how they doe comfort and confirme all Chriſtians,942. Sufferings of Chriſt teach us how to ſuffer,945. That we ought to ſuffer two waies,945. To ſuffer with Chriſt, and for Chriſt,how ready and willing we ought to be, 946. Sufferings of Chriſt were voluntary,435 How generally they were,914.How unſpeakable, far more then are expreſſed by the Evangeliſts,915.Sufferings of Chriſt not imaginary,but true reall ſufferings,915.
God provideth ſufficient for every man, 1083.
Sun hath three things in it,274.
Superiors what they muſt doe to procure peace,503.
Suggeſtions unto ſins are ſins,587 How they are to be avoided,587.
The ſureſt ſigne of ſalvation, 1050.
Why Chriſt became our ſuretie,938.&c.

Sw.

Swearing how fearefull,414.
Continuall ſwearing what a dangerous ſin, 751.
Sword and bowe the chiefeſt inſtruments of war and what they ſignifie,1.

Sy.

That we ſympathize in the ſufferings of our brethren,945.

Ta.

T*Amberlaines* practiſe,151.

Te.

Teares of two kindes,317. Three ſorts of good teares,ibid. Teares of Mary Magdalen threefold,318. The powerfull effects of contrite teares,ibid. Three impediments of teares, 319.Teares to be prayed for,ibid. The properties of them,119.Like the river Brenbo,ibid.
Teacher commended by three things,99.
Temerity what a miſchiefe it doth,391.
Temptations manifold, 126.
Tenth a ſigne of perfection,551.
Terme of our life twofold,183.
Terrors of the wicked,496.
Teſtament of the godly and of the wicked, 496.
Texts of Scripture, 4. Moſt comfortable, 22.
Teares are ſpeciall meanes to prevaile with God,625.

Beſt way to teach is to lay a good foundation,846.

A perfidious tempting of God, what a horrible ſin,749. &c.

The temporall things of this life to be prayed for,1083.

The teſtimonies that prove Chriſt to be the true Meſſias.458. &c.

Teſtimony of the Apoſtles to bee beleeved for two ſpeciall reaſons,991.

Text of Salomon, Pro.8.22. whether corrupted by the Arrians, 782.

Th.

That we ought to be Thankefull unto God for all we have,681. How we ought to bee thankfull to God for giving the Word to bee incarnate,792. For the ſufferings of Chriſt,944

Thankefullneſſe to be expreſſed by workes, ibid.

Theator where the Tragedy of Chriſt his Paſſion was acted, was Ieruſalem, and why, 866.

Thankefull we ought to be to God for his gifts,520.

Thanks the onely thing that God requireth at our hands,560.

Things foure, impoſed on man for ſin,532.

Thoughts that are idle hinder our prayers, 560.

Threatnings of God how put in the cloud, 5.

Third day, why the appointed day of Chriſt his Reſurrection,980.

The fitteſt day for Chriſt to riſe in reſpect of his perſon,980. &c.

Chriſt riſing the third day did paralell our creation, and left a patterne of our condition, 981. &c.

What we ought to thirſt after,933.

Thomas, whether he was with the Eleven, when Chriſt appeared to them the firſt time, 990.

Thoughts that are wicked, bring forth wicked works,588.

Three perſons in one Eſſence of God,772.

Three things handled touching the perſon of the Sonne,776. Three ſiſters of the deſtinie what they ſignifie,796.

Three wonderfull things obſervable in making the Word fleſh,806

Three things meaſure all durations,851

Three things obſervable in the day of Chriſt his nativity,854.

Three things that move attention, 866.

Three things effected in us by the meditation of Chriſt his Paſſion,867. Three things move us to love any one,869. Three things happened to Chriſt in Gethſemane after his bloudy ſweat,898.

Threefold argument urged by the Iewes to move Pilate to crucifie Chriſt,910. That there is a threefold neceſſity,935. The three women ſeeking Chriſt, ſignifie three properties of the Church,957. Three things required to make an action good,959. Three things excellent in the Angels,966. Chriſt, how hee remained three daies in his grave, 983. &c. Three dreadfull enemies of man,993. Three things conſidered about our ſpirituall aſcention,1025. Three ſorts of men excluded from the Paſchall Lambe, 1067. Three ſorts of Preachers,1079. &c. Three reaſons to move us to thankefullneſſe,1084. A threefold voice of the creature, 1084. &c. Three reaſons to drive away ingratitude from us,1085. Three degrees of thankfullneſſe,1085. Three reaſons to move us to pray for our Miniſters, 1103.

Ti.

Timiditie the cauſe of much evill in a iudge, 387. And a great fault in preachers, ibid.

Titles honorable given to the Scriptures, 153.

Titles honorable given to the Miniſters,386

Title of Pilate, the quality of it,373.

Times of God muſt not be preſcribed, 484.

Time miſapplyed how dangerous, 316. Time of our calling,453. The times wherein effectuall grace is hardly diſcerned,484. Gods time muſt not bee neglected,251. The right time of ſacrificing the Paſchall Lambe was obſerved by Chriſt,152.

No time miſpent, that is ſpent to know the perſon of Chriſt,798.

Chriſt how made in time,851.

Of the time when Chriſt was borne,851.

How time hath his fullneſſe,851. &c.

The particular time of the Words incarnation,852.

Titillation, and thoughts of ſinne, is ſinne, 588.

To.

Tombe of Chriſt how truely beautified, 315.

Torments of Hell, how intollerable,641.

Not equall to all the damned,648.

Not ſuffered by Chriſt,994.

Tr.

That we doe not traduce ſins from our parents,754.

Tranſubſtantiation hath a double contradiction,709.

How full of abſurdities,710.

Defenders of Tranſubſtantiation how agreeable to the falſe Prophets, whereof our Saviour biddeth us to beware,976.

What the Author thinketh of Tranſubſtantiation,977.

Treaſon of Iudas, what it ſhould teach us, 902.

Treachery what a miſchiefe it doth,508.

Treaſon of the Gun-powder, foure things conſiderable in it, 174. &c.

Traditions left by the Apoſtles,379. Doubts about them, ibid.

Tranſlating of the Scriptures when it began, 380. How uſefull it is for the Church,383.

True translation derogates nothing from the dignity of the originall,549.
Traytors punished,365.
Truce betwixt the Wolves and the sheepe, 854.
Truth how hardly found out,213.
Truth why not said to remaine,285. Oftentimes it doth not appeare, how handled, time the best friend of truth,285.
Mystery of the Trinity why not fully revealed at the first,772.
How darkly shewed in the creatures,773.
Trismegistus, what he said of the Word,796 &c.
Morall truth, what it is,734.
Truth in us not as it is in God,734.
Phylicall truth what it is,734.
God is truth two waies,734.
All truths, how they doe proceed,734.
Truth of things, of understanding, of words, 734,735.
Divine truth measureth all things,735.
Expressed truth is twofold,735.
Truth, how excellent it is,736.
How like the light,736.
How it expelleth errors,736.
Sheweth what every thing is,736.
How it begets us to God,736.
God true in himselfe, in his workes, and his words,736.
The primarie expressed truth, contained in the holy Scriptures,735.
Truth to be sought whatsoever it cost, 736.
To be defended with the losse of all that we have,737.
How alwaies handled on earth,737.
How at last it will prevaile,737.
How every truth proceedes from God,739.
How God loveth it,740.
How it should be alwaies spoken,740.
How hardly found in these daies,740 744.
Truth makes us like to God,744.
Truth and justice, how they pleaded against man,801.

Tu.

To Turne from sinne, turnes away all the wrath of God,725.

Tw.

Twelve apparitions of Christ after his resurrection,986.
Twelve wonders in the Manna of the Israelites,1083.
Two things further the sins of the parents to continue in the children,754.
Twofold will in Christ,787.
Two sorts of Mediators,787.
Two reasons shewing why Christ was made flesh,802.
Two things to be done for man before he could be saved,802.
Two things to bee considered touching the conception of Christ,813.
Two signes of a true Teacher,904.
Two reasons moved Pilate to condemne Christ,911.
That there is a twofold hope,1049.
Two kindes of prayer,1081.

Ty.

Type of Christ propheste fulfilled,385.
Tyrant what he is and what he doth,168. Their inforced confessions, ibid.
Giving of Canaan to the Israelites, a type of giving heaven to us,680.
The three women seeking Christ, a type of the Church,956.&c.
Typicall testimonies that Christ should rise the third day,979.
To live under the Tyrannie of sin, how lamentable it is,1028.

Va.

Vanities of the world hinder us to Christ, 80 & 81. Like feathers,226.
Valley the properties of it,113.
Vanity of some women,226.
Worldly vanities not to bee hunted after, 513.
Vanities of the world, how soone they passe away,680.&c.
Christ despised all vanities,764.
Vaine-glory, how it tainteth many of the Clergy, 59.
Valentinus his heresie,819.

Vb.

Vbiquity cannot be communicated to any creature,697.
Vbiquitie of Christ his body, overthrowne by the assertion of the Angell,972.&c.
Objections of the Vbiquitaries answered, 705.843.

Ve.

Vengeance to the wicked,12.
Venus her sonnes,16.
Vertues a connexion of them in the godly, 188.
Foure morall vertues,270.
Vertues of the heathens, how farre acceptable to God,287. And wherein vitious, ibid.
Morall vertues without faith in Christ like the sands, in foure respects,293.
Vertue how excellent,312.
Vertues of some women,320,321.
Vertues of Pilate,362.
Veniall sinnes, or the least sins bring death, 606.
Vertue is of an admirable beauty,613.
Christ a patterne of all vertue,765.

Vi.

Victory of Christ over Hell, Death, Sinne, and Satan, 1027.
Villanies of Satan, to be shewed, and why, 846.
Villanies done to Christ, not paraleld since the world began, 908
Vices the seede of them all in the wicked, 188.
Vices of Pilate, 364.
Vices corrupt all goodnesse, 369.
Victory how painted by the Romanes, 346.
Vineger, how given to Christ to drinke, 914.
Christ why borne of a Virgin, 815. &c.
The blessed Virgin still continued a Virgin to her death, 815.
Visitation of God twofold, 752.
To visit, what it signifieth, 752.
God visiteth the afflicted, 752.
God visiteth the wicked, 752.

Vn.

Vnderstanding of Adam in Paradise, how excellent, 619.
Our understanding now, how darkened through sin, 619. &c.
How quicke and sharpe in naturall things, 620.
How blockish in all Divine mysteries, 620.
Our understanding of God very small, 674.
Vnion of Christ his natures expressed by a simily of Iustin Martyr, 835.
Wherein the Nestorian heretickes avouched the same to consist, 837.
Wherein the Lutherans affirmed it to consist 838.
Wherein it doth truly consist, 839.
How unconstant we are, 511.
Our unworthinesse, 16.
Vnion with Christ the benefits of it, 157.
Our union with Christ spirituall, 239.
Vncharitablenesse hinders the teares of contrition, 319.
The unity and confederacie of the wicked, 494.
Vnthankefull for Gods grace, reprehended, 470.
Vnlitered men blamed for their rashnesse, 378.
Vnion of the two natures, inconvertible, indivisible, &c. 839.
Vnion of things three waies made, 840.
Vnion of Christ his natures substantiall, 840.
Ineffable, 840.
What benefits it bringeth, 841. &c.
Wee must bee united to Christ if wee will ascend to Heaven, 1023.
Vnity of brethren, 1075.
Want of unity amongst us, 1076.
Vnrepentant sinners shall never be absolved 751. &c.

Vo.

Voice of the creature threefold, 1084.
Threefold voice of Gods gifts, 519.
Christ knowne by his voice, 327.
Evill vowes not to be performed, 489.
Voice of God taken two waies, 153.

Vp.

An Vprights life procureth peace, 505.

Vs.

Vsurer who is the best, 339.

Vz.

Vzzia's exclusion out of the Temple examined, 389.

Wa.

Waight of sinne feared by Christ, 895.
Christ how he walked upon the waters, 844.
Waighty affaires to be done by our selves, 371.
The waight of sin, 416.
Waights helping us forward, 131.
The Want that our refractorie men would bring upon our Church, 401.
Wars justly undertaken lawfull, 507.
Civill wars above all things to be avoided 508.
The world warres against us, 401.
Godly warre with three sorts of enemies, 491.
Our warre how to be waged, 492.
Warre of the wicked threefold, 494.
The War we make with God, 14.
Waies of God different from our waies, 2.
Way to happinesse shewed by God, 69.
We are unable to walke in it, 70.
New Way, 70.
Waies of vertue easier then the waies of sin 137.
Warre how lawfull, 1083.
All Wants supplyed by Christ, 766.
Way to Heaven how said to be hard, 650.
And how easie, 650. &c.
Three waies of knowing God, 674.
Three waies of expressing what God is, 675.
Waies of wickednesse, how hard and difficult, 651.
Best way to teach is to lay a good foundation, 846.
Way to save man could never have beene found but onely by the wisedome of God, 847.

We.

Weakenesse of men, 17. 57.

Wealth, what discommodity it bringeth, 959.
Wealth what it doth, 56. & 81. Like the sands in foure respects, 296.
The Wealth of God what it is, 56.
Worldly wealth, 336. Like Snow-balls, 413.
Christ wept thrice, 317.

Wh.

Whippers of themselves who were the first, 95
Whooredome of ours how great, 10.
Whelpe of the Lyon how long it sleepeth, and how rowzed, 122.
White clothing of Christ, what it signified, 907.
White, an argument of innocency, 907.

Wi.

Wicked men delight in committing sinne, 603.
They are greedy to do it, 603.
And they have their full content when they have done it, 603
How they should be afraid to offend Gods power, 713.
They have no part in the speciall mercy of God, 721.
Wicked of what disposition, 240. They never beleeve the truth, 278. Worse then divels, 278. Have the historicall faith and the faith of miracles and the temporarie faith, 278, 279. But not the true saving faith, 280. How miserable to live among them, 330. How constant in their wickednesse, 409 Delivered to three fearefull traditions, 428. That they should be terrified from sin, 429.
Wicked men not to be spared, 105.
Wicked why condemned, 432 The wicked are to be loved, 447. They may loose all the graces they have, 480. & 484. The wicked to be opposed by the Ministers, Magistrates and every man, 492, 493. Fought against by the creatures, 494. They are at warre with the godly, 495. And against themselves, ibid. Their testament, 496. Their terrors, ibid.
The wickednesse of men, 17.
Wicked men not loved of God, 721. They are with-held from many sins by the goodnes of God, 721 To give unto the wicked power to serve God, God is no waies bound to doe it, 773.
The wickednesse of professors of the truth, ought no waies to disparage the truth of God 738. &c.
The Wicked how they abuse Gods goodnesse, 741. How punished in their children, 753. That they shall be punished, 752. Not every sinne of the wicked is visited upon their children, 754.
The wicked how they doe deceive themselves, 955. How it hapneth that they seeke not God, 963.
How they are terrified and punished by the Angels, 966.
How they are said to ascend, 1013.
How still captives unto Satan, 1028.
Wife of Pilate, how she justified Christ, 909
Will of God revealed in our consciences, and in the Scriptures, 584.
Will of sinners, 600. &c. How fearefull is their state, 601. They can pleade no excuse, 601.
The Will commandeth all the faculties of the soule, 617. Will to sin, deserveth the punishment of sin, 617. Our will cannot be compelled by Satan, nor by any other outward enemie, 617 619. Our owne will is the cause of all our woe, 618 How our will to do good, is quite killed by sin, 618. It is drawne to sin by our owne corruption, 619. How it is guided by the judgement, 619. How we may bee said to have free-will, ib. To will to sin, ever is a temporary act, 645. &c. God cannot will things contrary to his nature, 695. To will a thing, we may be said two waies, 704.
Will worship rejected, 156.
Will of God twofold, 221. Properties of his secret will, ibid. His will never frustrate, 423. Distinguished, 424. Done by the wicked, ibid. Seeming divers, 425. He willeth things two waies, ibid. In what sence God willeth sin, 704
Will of Christ twofold, 787, 790. To doe the will of God, will sooner bring us to know God, then to heare his Word, 989.
Wits that are quicke what they are like,
Winds signifie the persecutions of hereticks, 302. They blow two waies, ibid.
Wings of the soule what they are, 377. Divers kinds of wings, 338. &c. Their use twofold, 345. Wings wherewith we flie to heaven, what they be, 1026.
Wine how deceitfull it is, 612.
Wisedome wished, 336. Two sorts of it, 337
Wisedome praised, 41. 337 Wisedome twofold, ibid. What wisedome doth, 56. The wisedome of God, ibid. Wherein it consisteth, 514. Wisedome is constant, 112. Wisedome of the primitive Church, 184. Why wisedome is ascribed to the Sonne, 773. By the wisedome whereof Salomon speaketh, Pro. 8. 22. what is meant, 781. How hard for the wisedome of God to please foolish man, Wishes of men divers 336.
Christ how said to be with God, 788. Not as we are said to be with God. 789. To be with God, and in God, how the same, 788.
Witnesses to be had of every great matter, 383. False witnesses how odious, 65. Witnesses of the birth of the Messias, 858.
Witches of Lamia what they did, 504.

Wo.

Woe trebled to the inhabitants of the earth, 612.
Wolfe the properties of it, 253.
Worshipped of the Lycopolites and why, 255
Women most cruell, 105. What mischiefe they effected, 220. Countenancing hereticks & most prone to superstition, ibid. The vertues and graces of some women, 320, 321.
Seven-fold wonder that God should love the world, 25.
Word of God the power of it, 143. 492. To be bee relied upon, 3. It teacheth us the right use of all things, 4. How nigh it is unto us, 129. It is the ordinary way to plant Religion, 153. The wonderfull effects of it, ibid. It is like fire, 171. It teacheth to know God, 327. The first word that Christ spake after his Resurrection, 326.

Women, why three went together unto the Sepulchre, 956. Why they were all three called by the same name, 956. They were a type of the Church, and of every Christian soule, 956. How sorrowfull they were, 957. How distinguished and knowne one from the other, 957. How they signifie three properties of the Church, 957. How feareless they were in seeking Christ, 957. &c. How they laboured to increase the numbers of beleevers, 958. How peaceably they came to the grave, 958. Many women were made instruments of great goodnesse, 264.

Word of God divided into two parts, 584. That the word was, before he was made flesh, 777. The word God, no accidentall, but an essentiall word, 781. The word, how he may be said to be created and begotten, 783.

Words of David, this day have I begotten thee, how understood, 783. &c.

Words of the Apostle, he is the first borne of every creature, how understood, 784.

Words of S. Luke, he shall be called the Sonne of God, how understood, 780.

Words of Salomon, the Lord created me, how understood, 781.

Words of Christ, my Father is greater then I, how understood, 789. &c.

Words of Christ, I came not to doe mine owne will, how understood, 790.

Words of S. Paul, then the Sonne shall bee subject to the Father, how understood, 790.

Words of Christ, I came from above, how understood, 819.

Words of the Apostle, God sent his Sonne in the similitude of sinnefull flesh, how understood, 810.

Words of our Creede, he descended into hell, how understood, 094 &c. The seaven gratious words that Christ spake upon the Crosse, 916.

Christ called the Word, because he declareth his Father unto us, 803 How God can expresse himselfe with one word, 793. Why Christ is termed the Word, 793. How the word God resembleth our outward word, 794. How it resembleth our inward word, ibid. How it differeth from our word, 794. &c.

Whether it be a name of Christ his person or his office, 795.

Why Saint Iohn useth the word, λόγος, the word, 795.

The Word why made flesh, 232. & 800.

Why the word, rather then the Father, or the Holy Ghost, 803.

The word onely assumed our flesh, 805.

How said to be made flesh, 833.

All the world without Christ will availe us nothing, 766.

Philosophers strive to prove the world to be eternall 685.

World how it deceives us, 23. Taken three waies, 28. It is twofold, 48. How many waies it seeketh to destroy us, 63. It hindereth us to let in Christ, 141. It warres against us, 491.

Worldly things what they be, 135. Full of feares, dangers, 467. Not to bee too eagerly sought after, 555.

World made by God, proved, 685.

World divided into his severall ages, 852. &c.

To flie the world, the next way to finde Christ, 989.

Workes that are ours, not to bee delighted in, 122.

Workes of mercy of three kindes, 149.

Working of God alwaies for the best to his servants, 2.

Good Workes how earnestly urged by the Protestants, 274. Excluded from the act of justification, 275. To what end taught, ibid.

How we must Worke with grace, 282.

Legall Workes like the sands in foure respects, 294.

Good Workes the best evidence of grace, 306, 307.

The best meanes to convert others, ibid.

Two sorts of enemies of good workes, 307

Worthie men raised to purge the Church 245.

Worthie men neglected what it hath done, 510.

Worthie sayings especially foure, 44.

Wrastlers at the olympian games how ordered, 133.

All the Wrath of this life is but the shadow of wrath, 194.

Writing a good meanes to helpe our memories, 374

Workes of our vocation to be followed, 587

Outward workes of God, common to each person of the God-head, 690. 773. &c.

They are transient and voluntary, 774.

Inward workes of God are ever in doing, 775.

They are necessary and incommunicable, that is, proper to each person, 775.

Worke of the incarnation, how common to the three persons, and how proper to Christ the Word, 805.

God worketh one contrary out of another, 823.

Workes of Christ testifie him to be the true Messias, 861, &c.

Workes of any man testifie what he is, 861.

Workes requisite to expresse thankefullnes, 944.

God worketh all the good that is in the Saints, and how God worketh our willingnesse to doe good, 963.

Good workes what they be, 1060, 1061.

God worketh foure waies, with meanes, without meanes, with weake meanes, contrarie to meanes, 691.

Workes of God prove the power of God, 700.

Our best workes have need of mercy, 719.

Workes of mercy of two sorts, 745.

Outward workes of mercy chiefly six, 745.

God worketh divers waies, 762.

Wormewood, wherefore good, 961.

Worth of the ſufferings of Chriſt, how to be conſidered, 941.

Wounds of Chriſt, why reſerved by him, 989. &c.

Wr.

Wrath of God feared by Chriſt, 897.

Wrath of God quite turned away by our repentance, 725.

Yo.

Yoke three kindes of them, 91. Firſt of ſin, Second of the world which is twofold, Third of Chriſt, which is alſo twofold, 92, 93. The law is a yoke in ſeven reſpects, 93. The yoke of the Croſſe, 94. Yoke of the Iewes what it was, 125. The yoke that Chriſt brake, and that which he layeth upon us, ibid.

Youth deſcribed and the miſeries thereof ſhewed, 627. &c.

Ze.

Zeale like fire, 170. & 171. Prepoſterous Zeale threefold, 174. The Zeale of many waxing cold, 879. Ignorant Zeale to bee pitied, 338.

Zeno what he ſaid of the word, 797.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

FINIS.

THE BEST RELIGION:

Wherein is largely explained the Summe and principall Heads of the Gospell.

In certaine Sermons and Treatises, the Particulars and Dependance whereof are set downe immediately after the Epistle.

With a large Alphabeticall Table.

By GR. WILLIAMS Doctor in Divinity, and Deane of Bangor.

ACTS 16. 17.

These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

LONDON,
Printed by George Miller, for Richard Stephens and Christopher Meredith, and are to be sold at the golden Lion in Pater-noster Row.
M.DC.XXXVI.

begat Ecclesiam morientium, a congregation of sinners, all subject unto death; so Christ the first day of the week was raised up, and lives for ever, to beget Ecclesiam resurgentium, a congregation of believers, that through him might live to God and with God for ever.

4 Respect. Christ rose the third day to be a patterne of our condition.

Fourthly, Christ by his example was to set down a patterne and a sampler of our state and condition: and we are all to learne of him, and to do as he did, if we desire to be happy where he is; but here we see Christ had his three dayes and no more; and therefore we must have the same three dayes, and the same like to his, if we would be Christians like to him.

The three dayes of Christ, and of all Christians.

Now these three dayes of Christ were thus distinguished; the first day was called the day of preparation, and this was the day of his Passion; the second day was called the Sabbath, and this was the day of his rest; and the third was called the first day of the week, and this was the day of his resurrection; and so must our three dayes beare equipage and prove to be like his, if we would be his.

The first day is a day of Passion.

The first is a day of preparation, a day of passion, a day of clouds and darkenesse, wherein with strong cries, and teares, and prayers, we must commend our selves unto the tuition and protection of God; for in this day we must strive and struggle against sin and Satan; we must suffer all their bitter darts against us, and we must fight against them till we die; and though this be a day of sorrow, yet we have some comfort in this day: for as this his first day was the shortest of all his three dayes; so is our life but a day; Give us this day our daily bread; and this day is but a span long, the shortest time that may be, like unto a dreame, or a tale that is told: and therefore we should be the more ready and willing to beare our crosse, because the time of our suffering is but very short.

Our suffering is but short.

The second day is a day of rest.

The second is a day of rest in our graves, where our flesh shall rest in hope, to be raised up at the last day. And

The third day is a day of resurrection

The third is a day of resurrection unto glory, the first day of the week, and the first beginning of a never-dying world.

But as Christ could not have risen in glory, had he not rested in hope, neither could he have rested in hope, had he not suffered and died in faith; so cannot we attaine unto a joyfull resurrection upon our third day, unlesse we rest in hope in our second day, neither can we rest in hope in our graves the second day, unlesse we do valiantly fight and suffer unto death on the first day; for this is the order that Christ took, and the disciple is not above his Master: and therefore if any bid us come down from the crosse, let us stop our eares, like the cockatrice, and let us bide on still with Iesus, that so we may rest and rise with Iesus.

Our Saviours order.

And so you see how, and why, our Saviour Christ was to rise againe the third day.

How Christ remained three dayes in his grave

Ob. But here it may be some will say (as they qui disputare mallent quam credere, which had rather dispute about his resurrection, than believe in his resurrection) that he was not only to rise the third day, but also to remaine three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth; and yet we find that he was buried by Ioseph and Nicodemus about three houres before Sun-set on Good-friday, and he rose againe about foure or five a clock on Sunday morning, which maketh not in all above thirty six, or thirty eight houres, or not above forty houres, if we cast it to the highest account: and therefore how could he be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth?

Leo Ser. 1. de resurrect.

Sol. To this Leo answereth, that Christ, lest his long absence should too much perplexe the afflicted minds of his disciples, Denuntiatam tridui moram tum mira celeritate breviavit, &c. Did so exceedingly shorten the fore-spoken three dayes space, that while the last part of the first day, and the first part of the last day is numbred with the second day, the time is only shortned, but the number of the dayes is not diminished; and so S. Augustine saith, that the last part of the first day is taken for the whole day, and so likewise the first part of the last day is taken for the whole day; and it is said that within the space of three dayes he should rise againe, that is, before three dayes should passe over.

Obiect.

Ob. But then, though this taking of part for the whole, might be sufficient to prove his being three dayes in the earth; yet this is not sufficient to shew how he was three nights as well as three dayes in his grave; for our Saviour saith, He must be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth, whereas by this reckoning we find but two nights in all: and therefore, passing by the severall answers of sundry learned men, to say what I think,

Mat. 12.40.

Sol. I answer, that twelve houres was the Iewes perfect day, according to that saying of Christ, Are there not twelve houres in the day? And the very same twelve houres, in the opposite Region of the heavens, is a perfect night; and we find that Christ remained in his grave three whole twelve houres, call it how you will: and therefore thus he may be truly said to be three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth; or els, Ioh. 11.9. How Christ remained three dayes and three nights in his grave.

I say secondly, that if we measure the time according to Gods measure of a day in the beginning, that is, from the beginning of the Evening, untill the Evening returned againe, as the evening and the morning was the first day, that is, the evening of the night, and the morning of the day, was the first day, then I say, that under these parts of the first and last day, must be (as there in Moses it is) understood the nights also; for as Moses reckoneth the evening and the morning of the day, for the day and night; so must we here understand these three dayes, for three dayes and three nights; and so Christ remained three dayes and three nights in the heart of the earth.

There are three sorts of dayes. 1 Dies naturales, 2 Dies artificiales, 3 Dies civiles, vel dies operis. Gen 1.5.

And thus we see both by types and the predictions of the Prophets, and by the assertion of Christ himselfe, that the Messias and Saviour of the world should be slaine, and must rise againe the third day.

Chap. V.

Of the Iewes reasons why they believe not Iesus the Sonne of Mary to be the Messias, and why they thinke he raised not himselfe from the grave.

2 Way.

SEcondly, for the confirmation of this point à posteriori, from the apparent proofe of the fulfilling of the same truth in the person of any one that was slaine, and did rise againe the third day, the question is betwixt us and the Iewes; whether Iesus the Sonne of Mary, whom they crucified and buried, and whom we preach and believe in, be the true Messias or not, and whether he raised himselfe from his grave, yea or no.

The question betwixt us and the Iewes.

To both these the Iewes answer no; not the Messias, not raised from the dead.

First, not the Messias, because he came not down from the Crosse, when he was fast nailed unto the same; for if he be the King of Israel, (said the chiefe of them, their high Priests and Elders of the people) Let him now come downe from the Crosse, and we will believe in him.

The Iewes reason, that Christ is not the Messias. Mat. 27.42.

Ah foolish nation, a nation void of understanding, and children of your father the divell, Namq; haud tibi vultus humanus, nec vox hominum sonat; for here you sing the same song, and you harp upon the same string as he did; If thou beest the Sonne of God, cast thy selfe downeward, saith the divell; and if he be the King of Israel, let him come down from the Crosse, say these children of the divell: so you see the one would have him to descend from the Temple, the other from the Crosse; the one from serving God, the other from suffering for man, and both to descend, whereas God made man to ascend.

Former reason answered. Mat. 4.6.

Chrysost. de cruce

Os homini sublime dedit cœlumq; tueri
Iussit.——

Ovid Metam. l. 1.

And of all his creatures, he made him only straight, to look up towards heaven, and bids men alwaies to have sursum corda, their hearts like their heads, lifted

God made man to ascend.

Phil.3.20.

up, their thoughts in heaven, and their conversations in heaven, as the Apostle speaketh: And therefore whensoever we are inticed to descend from the height of Gods service, or suffering upon our Crosse, and to settle our affections here upon the base things of this world, let us know, it is the voice of Satan, not of God.

Mat.27.42.

I, but let him come downe, and we will believe in him, saith this people; and let us enjoy the pleasures and the vanities of the earth, and we will serve him, saith the generation of this world.

Luke 16.31.

But as our Saviour saith unto them in another case, If you will not believe Moses and the Prophets, neither will you believe though one should arise from the dead; So S. Bernard saith in this case, if now you will not believe in him that raised himselfe from the grave, you would never have believed in him, if he had then descended from the Crosse; Quia plus erat de sepulchro surgere, quam de cruce descendere, & plus mortem resurgendo destruere, quam vitam descendendo servare; because it was a greater matter to raise himselfe from the grave, than to descend from the Crosse, and it was a farre more excellent argument of invincible omnipotency, being dead, to destroy death, by rising againe from the dead, than being alive, to save his life by descending from the Crosse: And so I say to the base descending worldlings, if they will not stay upon the Crosse, to suffer with Christ here, they are not worthy to be exalted to raigne with Christ hereafter; and if they will not believe in him, and serve him for the hope of the joyes of heaven, they are not worthy to be received into the number of his servants; because such men love the world more than God, and will not love God but for the worlds sake, like unto the Woman, Quæ non maritum amat, sed aurum mariti; which loves her husbands wealth more than her husband, or not her husband, but for his wealths sake.

Greg: Hom. 21. in Evang.

That it was a greater matter to rise from the dead, than to come down from the Crosse.

Aug. de verb. Dom. Serm.

The Iewes reason that Christ raised not himselfe from the grave.

Secondly, they say he raised not himselfe from the grave, but his Disciples came by night and stole him away; and if this be true, he could not be the true Messias.

Whether the Disciples stole away Christ from his grave or not.

But what? his Disciples that forsooke him, and forsware him, while he was yet alive, and could, if he would, have rescued himselfe out of the hands of all his enemies? Alas, poore men, durst they now, silly fishermen, thrust themselves among the pikes of armed souldiers, to steale away a dead carkasse, that could neither helpe himselfe nor them? No, no, they were readier to hide themselves in graves, than to adventure to take him out of the grave: And therefore Mary Magdalen, that knew his Disciples did not, nor durst not take him away, thought rather, (when she found him not in his tombe) that they which left him no rest in his life, did also take him and tosse him now out of his grave,

Virg. Æneid. l. 1.

——Sic multum terris jactatus & alto.

And so left him not, neither in life nor death; Dementia insanabilis, so implacable was their rage, and so outragious was their malice against him.

Amb in hunc locum Luca.

But though she was in the right, that his Disciples did not meddle with him, yet herein she was deceived, Putando Christum sublatum esse de monumento, when she thought that the souldiers had removed him, (saith S. Ambrose;) because this victorious Lion did Sampson-like carry away the gates of Gaza, and burst open the doores of his sepulcher, that his glorious Body might come forth; yet the womans weakenesse may be excused, Quia cum pietate sociatus est; because her errour proceeded of ignorance, and was accompanied with an upright conscience: but who can extenuate, or who will not aggravate that extreame folly and horrible impiety of this wretched and malicious people? For they not onely refused to receive him for their Saviour, and said, Nolumus hunc regnare super nos, we will have none of this man, we will have none other man but Cæsar to be our King; but they did also persecute him as a seducer, and crucified him as a false usurper, & then buried him without honour, there were no widowes to make lamentation, nor any of his friends that durst shew it; and being buried, they locked fast his sepulcher, Molemq; & montes insuper altos imposuere mali, & these wicked men have prest him down with a mighty stone, and they hire a band of armed soldiers to watch him,

Judg 16.3.

How the High Priests did what possibly they could to hinder the resurrection of Christ.

that

that he ſhould neither riſe himſelfe, nor his Diſciples come and take him away: And therefore his Diſciples that were ſo lately amazed at his paſſion, were now ſo ſtupified at this obſignation, this ſealing, and watching and warding of him, that they durſt not once paſſe out of doores to looke after his Reſurrection, untill theſe three Women, (which in reſpect of their ſexe, eſteemed themſelues more free from violence, and thereupon preſumed firſt to ſee the Sepulcher) had informed them, that this one had chas'd a thouſand, and had put all that band of men to flight.

Or if their hearts had ſerved them, to adventure ſo great a danger, and that they had recollected more courage now after his death, then ever Peter the boldeſt of them had, during his life, (which all men will ſay, is moſt unprobable, becauſe a living Dogge is better then a dead Lyon; and therefore Chriſt being alive might animate the vildeſt coward-like Thirſites, to be more valiant and adventurous for his defence, then now being dead he could doe to the moſt heroicke Achilles;) yet is it any waies likely, or could it poſſibly be, that his Diſciples ſhould come thither, breake up the Monument, tumble away that great ſtone, take up his body, beſtrip him of his winding ſheete, lay all his linnen cloathes, wherewith he was wrapped, ſo orderly by themſelues, (a ſigne they had leiſure enough, and were in no danger at all, or elſe they were very fooles, that they did not ſuddenly ſnatch him away, and take ſome other time and place to beſtrip him,) and then carry him away, never after to be ſeene or found, without the eſpyall of ſome one or other, among ſo many that attended there? Ideo mentita eſt iniquitas ſibi: But the Iewes anſwer, that as the fooliſh Virgins, (whereof our Saviour ſpeaketh) ſo theſe fooliſh and ſottiſh Souldiers, they all ſlumbred and ſlept; and then while their Argos eies were ſleeping, his Diſciples came, thoſe poore freſh-water Souldiers, and their committed charge was ſtollen away. Eccleſ. 9. 4.

But then I replie firſt, with Rhemigius out of S. Auguſt. If they all ſlept, Quomodo furtum viderunt? How can they tell his Diſciples, and not others tooke him away? Might not God take him as he did Enoch, or the Angels bury him and hide him, as they did the body of Moſes? or how can they tell who tooke him away? for they ſlept; and therefore ſurely no credit to be given unto them: If they had ſaid, We ſlept, and therefore we cannot tell what became of him, this might have had ſome likelihood of truth: but to ſay, We ſlept, and his Diſciples ſtole him away; this muſt needs be apparantly falſe. The abſurdities following the high Prieſts ſaying. 1 Abſurditie.

Secondly, If they ſlept why did the High Prieſts give them money, large money (ſaith the Text) for their negligence, and not rather puniſh them for their ſlothfulneſſe? muſt men be ſo largely rewarded for evill doing? eſpecially in ſo weighty a cauſe, as, not the loſſe of a City, or a Kingdome, but the loſſe of ſalvation to the whole race of mankind, when all depended upon this one point; for if he roſe againe, he was the Saviour of the World; if not, he was but an impoſtor: Why then would they not watch? or if not, why not ſeverely puniſhed? and no puniſhment too great for ſo great a negligence? 2 Abſurditie.

Thirdly, If they were awake, why did they hire them to ſay they were aſleepe? This may be anſwered: They knew money delivered him into their hands, and therefore they thought that money would conceale the truth from the people, for as the Poet ſaith; 3 Abſurditie.

——— Quid non mortalia pectora cogit
auri ſacra fames? ——— Virg. Æneid. l. 1.

What wickedneſſe is not done for money? Theſe Souldiers had beene Preachers to publiſh this truth unto the World, had not their mouthes beene ſtopt with ſilver; for as this opens the mouthes of many, to bruite forth and to teſtifie many lies; ſo it ſhuts the mouthes of as many, to conceale and keepe ſecret many truthes; and therefore the high Prieſts did give large money to theſe ſouldiers, to conceale this truth, and to belie themſelues, to ſay that they were aſleepe, when as indeed they neither ſlumbree nor ſlept. How the love of money maketh many men to doe any thing.

Well then, if they were asleepe, how can they tell, what became of him, and why did the chiefe Priests give them such large summes of monies for their negligence? or if they were awake, why did they hire them so dearely to say they were asleepe? To all this they must answer now to us, as they did heretofore in another case to Christ; We cannot tell: But then O foolish Iewes, if you cannot tell, why will you not beleeve that your Messias is alreadie come, and that God hath raysed him from the dead? Saint Paul tels us why, Because partly obstinacy is come upon them, untill the fulnesse of the Gentiles be come in. O Lord if it be thy will, doe thou open their eyes, that they may see this truth.

Matth.21. 27.

Rom.11.25.

CHAP. VI.

Of the testimony of the Angell, and the manifold apparitions of Christ after his Resurrection, to prove the truth and certainty of his Resurrection.

YOu see then, how the Iewes are blinded, to destroy themselues; but on the other side, we doe know, and beleeve, and teach this Iesus the Sonne of Mary, whom the Iewes have crucified, to be the true Messias and Saviour of the World, not onely because he lived without sinne, and died without cause, (on his owne behalfe;) but especially because that he being dead, and laid in his grave, did declare himselfe mightily to be the Sonne of God, by his Resurrection from the dead: And this Resurrection of him, we doe most faithfully beleeve, and as constantly teach, for these three especiall reasons and respects; and a threefold cord is not easily broken.

Rom. 1.4.

That wee beleeve the Resurrection of Christ, for three speciall respects.

1. In respect of this Angelicall assertion.
2. In respect of his personall apparitions.
3. In respect of many other circumstantiall demonstrations.

First, the Angell said unto the women, why seeke yee the living among the dead? he is not here but he is risen, Et si non credideritis oraculo credite oculo, and if you will not beleeve us, beleeve your owne eyes, for you may see the place where he lay. And this was spoken unto two women, as Saint Matthew sheweth, and by two Angels, as Saint Luke saith, and therefore if Dives thought that the words of one man comming from the dead would be sufficient to make all his brethren to beleeve the torments of hell, why should not the words of these heavenly Angels be alonely sufficient to make us to beleeve this divine truth of the resurrection of the Sonne of God? for the Angels though they be mutabiles natura, mutable in respect of their nature, yet are they now confirmati per gratiam, ne a veritate voluntatem averterent, so confirmed by grace, that they shall never avert themselues from the truth, saith Isidorus.

Matth. 28 1. Luke 24. 4.

First, The Angels testifie the Resurrection of Christ.

Isidorus de summo bono.

Secondly, as the Angels had testified, that he was not there in the grave among the dead, but was risen and alive among the living; so truth it selfe confirmes this truth unto us, by those manifold apparitions that he made after his resurrection, during the space of forty dayes, that before he ascended into heaven, he walked here on earth. And these (if I be not far deceived in my reckoning) were at least twelue times, according to the number of his 12. Apostles.

2 That Christ appeared twelue severall times after his resurrection. Marke 16 9.

First, he appeared unto Mary Magdalen apart; where we must observe, that he appeared first unto a woman, that no woman should thenceforth be any wayes reproached by any man, for their first transgression and seduction of man; quia ut culpam viro transfudit, transfudit etiam & gratiam, veteriſque lapſus erumnam resurrectionis judicio compensavit, because that as a woman was the first instrument of death, so she was the first messenger of life, and brought the first tidings of the resurrection of Christ, which is the surest argument of the salvation of man.

First, to Mary Magdalen and why.

Ambroſ. l 10. in Luc. 24. Beda in c. v/s. Luc.

And he appeared to this woman first, quia Dominum pre caeteris dilexit, ideo pra caeteris videre meruit, because she loved him above all, therefore she obtained to see him before all: She loved much, saith our Saviour, and she saw him first saith the Evangelists: and therefore no doubt, but he shewed himselfe to her first, because she loved him most: whereby we see that with God there is no respect of persons, no difference of sex, but whosoever loveth him, man or woman, young or old, that person shall be respected of him; for I will love them that love me, saith the Lord: and therefore whosoever feareth God and worketh righteousnesse, whosoever loves him most, and seekes him first, he may be sure he shall be first found of him. And secondly, he appeared to this woman first, because this woman was most memorious and mindfull of him, and of all those mercies and benefits wherewith Christ had inriched her soule; and therefore he was most mindfull of her.

Aug. medita. c. 35.

Hieron. ep. de quæst. hebraic.

But who this Mary Magdalen was, it is easier questioned then answered; for Theophylact, Stapulensis, and others, doe avouch that there were three Mary Magdalens; Saint Ambrose saith there were two; Albertus, Aquinas in John 12. and Rossensis de tribus Magdalenis, doe constantly affirme there was but one: and she, they say, was a Noble woman, one of the bloud-royall of the Tribe of Iuda, the daughter of one Syrus and Eucharia, a sister unto Lazarus and Martha, which divided the inheritance of their father betwixt them three; Lazarus had all the possessions that were in Ierusalem; Martha had Bethany; and Mary had Magdalum Castrum, the Castle of Magdala, from whence she was called Mary Magdalen.

Ambrosi. lib. in Luc. 24. Albertus in Luc. 7.

Whether there were more Mary Magdalens then one.

For my part, I confesse curiosity is to be avoided, yet the truth is to be imbraced, and Maries face is not like Moses face, so vailed with mysteries, but that we may without danger inquire who she is; and therefore to say what I thinke, I am of S. Ambrose minde, that (at least) there were two (if there were no more) Mary Magdalens; for Saint Iohn saith, that Mary Magdalen stood at the Sepulcher weeping, and that Iesus appeared unto her, and said touch me not: here is a Mary Magdalen all alone: and Saint Matthew saith, that Mary Magdalen and the other Mary came unto the Sepulcher, and were instructed by the Angels that Christ was risen, and therefore they departed and went away with joy; and it is not said that Mary Magdalen staied behind, but that both went (for he names but two) and as they went to tell his Disciples, Iesus met them, and they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him: and therefore no doubt, but there must be two distinct Mary Magdalens; for she whereof Saint Iohn speaketh, was alone, and staid by the Sepulcher weeping, and was denied to touch Christ, because (as Saint Ambrose saith) shee doubted, and did not as yet fully beleeve the truth of his resurrection; but shee whereof Saint Matthew speaketh, was accompanied with the other Mary, and returned with the other Mary, and met him in the way, and held him by the feet, and worshipped him, Christ suffering her to doe this, because she beleeved him to be risen from the dead.

Iohn 20. 1. 11. 18.

Matth. 28. 1. 9.

Why Mary Magdalen was not suffered to touch Christ.

Now which of these Mary Magdalens was the woman to whom Christ first appeared, Saint Marke plainely sheweth, that it was she out of whom he had cast seven devils; a great sinner, and a great lover of our Saviour Christ, the chiefest sinner of all these women, and the first seeker of our blessed Saviour; for she came alone, while it was yet darke, before the day-light; by the light of grace; but the other Mary Magdalen came with Mary the mother of Iames and Salome, at the rising of the Sun, long after her. A great comfort and a rare patterne for all sinners; her sinnes repented of, and relinquished, were no hinderance of her to see our Saviour first: but because her sinnes were great, we see her repentance was very great, her care was great, her love was great; for shee wept and washed our Saviours feet with her teares, and wiped them with the haires of her head, a true token of inward sorrow; she powred a box full of precious ointment upon his head as hee sate at meate, an apparant argument

Marke 16. 9.

Ioha 20 1.

Marke 16. 2.

The great care & diligence of this Mary Magdalen.

of her outward works; shee rose earely, she sought him carefully, and she wept bitterly, not with those undiscreet women for Thammyse, which was a brazen image with leaden eyes, that being molten with heate, did seeme to weepe, and so caused the women to sympathize in teares, and to weepe (as is thought) for Adonis: but shee weepes for Adonai, for her Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ; a rare example of great piety; and therefore though she had offended much, yet because she sorrowed much, she loved much, she had much forgiven her, and much love shewed unto her; for he which is first and last, did shew himselfe first unto her: O that they which walke in her sinnes, would tread in the same steps of her repentance.

Ezech. 8. 14.

Secondly, to the three women returning homeward.

Secondly, he appeared to all the women together, as they returned homeward from the Sepulcher; to teach us, that never any man truly sought for Christ, but with these women, he should be sure to find him.

Thirdly, to Simon Peter alone. Chrys. 1 Cor. 15. 5.

Thirdly, he appeared to Simon Peter alone, the first among the men saith Chrysostome; for when the women told the Disciples, that Iesus was risen, Peter and Iohn ran both unto the Sepulcher, and though Iohn came there first, yet Peter entred first; to note unto us, not onely that mysticall truth, which divers of the Fathers have observed, viz. that the Synagogue of the Iewes, like Iohn that came first to the monument, but would not enter, had the first meanes to come to Christ, and yet refused to come unto him; for it commanded the precepts of the Law, and it heard the Prophecies of the Gospell concerning the incarnation and the passion of the Messias, and yet quem longè latèque prophetavit, præsentem vidit & recipere renuit, whom they long expected and much desired, and ranne fast to see him, when they come unto him, or rather when he came to them, they quite rejected him, and would not beleeve in him; and the Church of the Gentiles, like Saint Peter that came last, yet entred first into the Sepulcher, though they had the last and the least meanes to come to Christ, yet would they first beleeve in Christ crucified, according as it was prophecied of them, as soone as they shall heare of me they shall obey me; but also that historicall truth, (which Chrysostome observes) that as Saint Peter first entred into the grave, so he should first see him that was laid and raised out of that grave, and that for these three especiall reasons.

A mistery discovered.

Why of all the Apostles he appeared first to S. Peter.

Idem hom 38. in 1 Cor. 15.

First, lest that if he had appeared first to others, Peter should thinke Christ had rejected him, as he worthily deserved, because he had so unjustly denyed Christ, Ideo Petro apparuit primum, therefore he appeared first to Peter, lest otherwise he should give offence to Peter, and seeme still to be mindfull of his offence, saith Theophylact, and Saint Chrysostome.

Secondly, because Saint Peter was a most faithfull, and a most worthy witnesse, such a one as would so willingly and so manfully, as he did in all places, testifie and lay downe his life for the testimony of Iesus Christ.

Thirdly, because Saint Peter was the first and the chiefest Apostle whom he called first, and who confest him first to be the Sonne of God: and therefore he doth appeare first unto him, and biddeth the women tell his Disciples and Peter, that is, and Peter especially, that he was risen, and went before them into Galilee.

Theoph in Mar. cap. 16. 7

But when or where, or after what manner he appeared thus first unto Peter, because the Scripture doth not expresse it, we can no wayes determine it, as both Theophylact and S. Gregory doe observe: and therefore it being a question, plus subtilitatis quàm utilitatis habens, that hath more subtile scrupulosity then any comfortable utility, I will peaceably passe it over.

Fourthly, to the Disciples travelling to Emaus. Luke 24. 13. Theoph. sup. Luc.

Fourthly, he appeared to the two Disciples journeying towards Emaus; the name of the one was Cleophas, and many thinke the other to be Saint Luke himselfe, who out of his modesty concealeth his owne name, saith Theophylact: It is certaine that they were none of the Apostles but some of the seventy two Disciples (as Nicholaus de Gorham well observeth;) for they came to Ierusalem, and found the 11 Apostles gathered together: and therfore these two could not be any

any of the twelve; because they found eleven together, and Judas was hanged, and Matthias not elected: and the manner how he appeared unto them is largely and plainely set downe by the Evangelist, and how he was knowne of them in breaking the bread; whereupon Saint Gregory hath left these two excellent morall notes and observations.

To flie the world is the next way to finde God.

First, that these two, fugientes civitatem sanguinolentam statim inveniunt Christum, flying this bloudy city, did presently finde their Saviour; to shew unto us, that while we live among the wicked, we shall live separate from God; but as Elias, when he left Iesabell, was presently accompanied by the Angell, so these two, and all those that forsake the world, or shun the wicked, shall presently finde their God.

That we shall sooner know God, by doing his will, then by the learning of his Word.

Secondly, That they which knew him not by the expounding of the Scriptures, doe know him by the breaking of the bread; to teach us, that we shall be more illuminated by him, for the doing of his will, then for the hearing of his Word: It is true, that the hearing of his Word did inflame their hearts within them, and moved them, no doubt, exceedingly to love him, and to perswade him earnestly to stay with them; but their eyes were opened, and their understanding inlightened by the breaking of the bread: for it is most certaine, that practicke knowledge is the surest knowledge in the World; and to practice any thing, is the chiefest way to attaine unto the knowledge of that thing: And therefore David saith, He was wiser then his Teachers, because he kept the Commandements of God. It may be his Teachers knew them as well, if not better then he, else how could they be his Teachers? yet herein he was wiser then they, because they perhaps knew them, and taught them, like the Pharisees, and did them not, but he learnt them, and kept them: and therfore he was wiser then his Teachers, because he kept the Commandements. And as it is the chiefest way for us to get the knowledge of any thing, by the practising of the same; so are they the only men which God chiefly doth illuminate, which do give themselves to the practising and performing of his will: For To him that ordereth his conversation right, will I shew the salvation of God, saith the Prophet. So here Christ, though he would not let these Disciples know him, while they talked with him, yet Dignatus est cognosci dum pascitur; He vouchsafed to open their eyes, and to make himselfe knowne unto them, when they fed him. And therefore, if we would know God, and be knowne of God, let us not only heare his Word, and talke of his will, but let us also performe his will, and keepe his Commandements; let us feede him in his members, and hee will feede our Soules with that foode which perisheth not.

Pſal. 119.

The keeping of Gods Law made David wiſer then his teachers.

Pſal. 50. 23.

Fiftly, To the eleven Apoſtles together.

Fiftly, He appeared unto the eleven Apostles, and all the rest of the Disciples that were with them, when the doores were shut, and standing in the middest of them, he said, Peace be unto you; to shew, that he was The Prince of Peace, which had now purchased their peace indeede; and he demanded, why thoughts should arise in their hearts; to shew unto us, that he was a God; because he knew the very secrets of their hearts; and then to shew that it was himselfe, and none other, he sheweth them his hands and his feete; and he did feede with them, and fedde them also with the Word of God, opening to them the Scriptures concerning him, and opening their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures.

Sixtly, To the ſame company, when Thomas was with them. Iohn 20. 24, 26.

Sixtly, Because Thomas was not with them, when he appeared unto them before, therefore he appeared to the same company againe within eight daies after, when Thomas was with them, (saith Saint Iohn;) and then he suffered his body to handled, and he shewed unto them the wounds of his body, which he kept (saith S. Augustine) Non necessitate, sed potestate; Not for any weakenesse in himselfe, that he could not heale them, and whole up those wounds that he received, but through his power he reserved them.

Why Christ reſerved his wounds.

First, to to shew the greatnesse of his love, that would suffer so much of wretched men, and for wretched men.

Secondly, to shew the greatnesse of mans malice, that would, Diomedes-like, so cruelly deale with so mercifull a God. Thirdly,

Thirdly, to ſtrengthen the weake faith of his wavering ſervants, Vt vulneribus corporis ſanaret vulnera incredulitatis; That they ſeeing the wounds of his body, might thereby have the wounds of their unbeleeving ſoules healed.

Fourthly, to ſhew the certainty of his Reſurrection, when they ſaw he had the ſame Body, which was crucified and pierced by his enemies.

Whether Thomas was with the eleven, the firſt time Chriſt appeared to them.

Ob. But againſt this it may be objected, that Thomas was with the reſt of his Apoſtles the very firſt time that he appeared unto them; for ſo Saint Luke ſaith, that the two Diſciples returning to Ieruſalem, found the eleven gathered together, and as they ſpake, Ieſus himſelfe ſtood in the middeſt of them: Therefore it ſeemeth ſtrange, that Saint John ſpeaking of this very ſelfe-ſame apparition, which was the firſt immediate night after his Reſurrection, (as both Saint Luke and Saint John doe accord) ſhould notwithſtanding ſay, that Thomas was not with them; for Saint Luke ſaith, eleven were there, and as yet there were but eleven in all; becauſe as I told you, Iudas was hanged, and Matthias was not elected.

Sol. I anſwer, that Saint Luke putteth downe eleven in a certaine number, for all of them that were there; becauſe there were eleven of them in all: And ſo he putteth all that were there, for all that were of them; As if in a Court where there be foure appointed Iudges, I ſhould ſay, I brought my cauſe before the foure Iudges, though but three of them ſhould ſit when my cauſe was heard: Or elſe I ſay, that Saint Luke and Saint Iohn may very well thus be reconciled; that when the two Diſciples came, Thomas might be with them, and all the eleven might be together, and when Ieſus came, Thomas might be abſent; for Saint Luke doth not ſay, that Ieſus found the eleven together but that the two Diſciples found the eleven together, and ſo they might be; and yet S. Iohn might ſay true, that Thomas was not with them, when Ieſus ſtood amongſt them; becauſe he might depart after they came, before Ieſus appeared unto them: for the Evangeliſt doth not ſay, how ſoone or how late Chriſt came, after the arrivall of the two Diſciples, but that he came that night as they were talking of him; and it is very probable, it was a good while after the comming of the two Diſciples; for before Ieſus is ſaid to ſtand amongſt them, it is ſaid, that thoſe two Diſciples had told their fellowes what things were done in the way, and how he was knowne of them in breaking of the Bread; all which declaration could not be delivered without ſome length of time, in which time Thomas, and others perhaps too, might take his leave for that night, and depart: And ſo I ſay, Thomas was there when the two Diſciples came, but was not there when our Saviour came.

Thomas was there when two Diſciples came, but was gone before Chriſt came.

Seventhly, to ſeaven men together Iohn 21. 2.

Seventhly, He appeared to Peter, and Iohn and Iames, Nathaniel and Didymus, and two other Diſciples, when they were a fiſhing at the Sea of Tyberias: And there he proved unto them the verity of his Deity, by that miracle of providing Fiſhes for them for to eate; and the truth of his humanity by eating meate with them.

Chap. 21. v. 14.

Ob. But here it may be objected, that Saint Iohn ſaith, this was the third time that he ſhewed himſelfe to his Diſciples, after his reſurrection: Therefore how ſhould it be the ſeventh time?

Sol. I anſwer briefly, that Saint Iohn ſpeaketh of his publike apparitions, to his Apoſtles and Diſciples, and not of any of his apparitions to the Women, nor of any private apparition unto any particular perſon; for ſo the words are, This was the third time that he ſhewed himſelfe to his Diſciples, that is, Solemnely and publikely, making himſelfe knowne unto them, which he did not unto the two Diſciples going to Emaus: And ſo we finde, that this was the third time that he publikely appeared unto all, or the moſt part of his Apoſtles.

Eighthly, To Saint Iames.

Eighthly, He appeared unto Iames the brother of the Lord; that is, the Coſen-Germane of Chriſt, according to the Fleſh; being the Sonne of Mary, that was ſiſter unto the Virgin Mary, (as Saint Hierome ſaith,) and not the Sonne of Ioſeph by another Wife, (as ſome would have it;) and he was called Iames the Heaven in Canel.

1 Cor. 5. 7.

juſt,

just, in regard of his upright and innocent life: Saint Paul particularizeth this apparition unto Iames, as a most speciall appearance, saying, that he was seene of Iames: but when this apparition was, we find it not expressed; yet Saint Hierome saith, it was within a very short time after his Resurrection; because (as he saith) this Iames, at the receiving of the Passeover, vowed that he would neither eate nor drinke untill he saw Christ risen from the dead: And therefore, when Christ came unto his Disciples, he called for meate, and did eate before them, and gave it likewise unto Iames, that hee might now eate, as Saint Hierome saith. 1 Cor. 15.7.

Ninthly, He appeared to the eleven Disciples at one time upon Mount Thabor in Galilee; and this S. Matthew intimateth, when he saith, that Iesus bade the women tell his brethren that he was risen, and that they should goe into Galilee, and there they should see him. Luke 24.41. Ninthly, to the eleven Disciples on Mount Thabor Mat. 28.10.

Tenthly, He appeared to more then five hundred brethren at once. Tenthly, To more then 500. brethren at once. 1 Cor 15.6.

Eleventhly, Hee appeared to all his Apostles and Disciples upon Mount Olivet by Ierusalem, when in the presence of them all hee ascended up into Heaven. Eleventhly, To all his Disciples on Mount Olivet. Mat 28.16.

Twelfthly, He appeared unto Saint Paul travelling to Damascus, as unto one borne out of due time, as himselfe confesseth. Twelfthly, To S. Paul going to Damascus.

Thus he did appeare unto his Apostles, and Disciples, and faithfull Servants, which were appointed afore of God, to be witnesses of his Resurrection; and thus they have testified unto all men these things which they have heard with their eares, which they have seene with their eyes, and which their hands have handled, of the Word of life: And if there were nothing else in the World, to move and perswade men, to give credit unto their testimony; yet me thinkes the plainenesse of their declaration, and the smalnesse of their expectation of any manner of profit or reward in the World, for the testifying of these things, should be sufficient to make all men to beleeve them: For Two speciall things should make all men beleeve the testimonies of the Apostles.

First, All the World may see, they sought not with any tricks of wit, to set a faire die upon a bad cloth; nor with any glozing speeches, fine sentences, subtill arguments, or any such like sophisticall waies, to procure credit unto themselves, and to draw men to beleeve fabulous inventions; but their proceeding is plaine, carrying nothing with it, but a declaration of simple truth, nakedly reported, without any manner of humane subtilty to confirme it. And First, their plainenesse.

Secondly, All the World may see, they looked for no gaine in the World, but the gaine of Soules, no credit by their writing, no profit by their preaching, but onely that men would beleeve the truth, to save their owne soules: If the man whom they had affirmed to be dead, and to have risen againe to life, had still continued with them, and had beene in expectation to bee some great Monarch of the world, it might be said, they avouched his rising from the dead, in hope to be raised by him to some eminent place in the world; but you see they looke for no such thing, neither by their testimony to raise him to any humane honour, nor by him to be raised, or to be any waies rewarded in this life themselves, unlesse it be to be afflicted and persecuted unto death, for this testimony of Iesus Christ: This was the best that they could expect: and therefore the testimony of these men must needs bee faithfull and true, to prove more then abundantly sufficient, that Iesus is the true Messias, and that being dead, he raised himselfe to life againe the third day. And yet Secondly, their desire, what they aimed at by their testimony.

Chap.

CHAP. VII.

Of many other circumstances that doe infallibly prove the Resurrection of Christ, and so consequently that Iesus Christ to bee the true Messias and Saviour of the world.

3 The circumstantiall proofes of the Resurrection of Christ.

THirdly, Besides all this, there be many other circumstantiall proofes and declarations of this same truth: God not desirous to make men beleeve so great a matter, as is the eternall salvation of all the world, without more then abundantly sufficient witnesse. And therefore

First, the great earth-quake. Cajetan in Mat. 28

First, At the very instance of his Resurrection, and descending of the Angels, (as Cajetan saith) there was a very great earth-quake, the earth either dancing for joy that Christ was risen, or trembling for feare that men would not beleeve this Resurrection of Christ.

Secondly, the sudden courage of the Apostles.

Secondly, The Apostles and Disciples hearts were presently changed; for whereas a little before they durst not peepe out of doores, because they did but waveringly thinke that this was he, which should have redeemed Israel, they doe now couragiously compasse the whole world, and confidently teach and avouch there is no other name given under heaven, whereby men may be saved, but the name of Iesus.

Thirdly, the apparitions of the raised bodies.

Thirdly, Many that were dead, rose from their graves, and appeared unto many of their acquaintance in Ierusalem, to testifie unto them, and to assure them of the Resurrection of Christ. Dives thought if one was sent from the dead, his brethren would beleeve him; and behold here are many sent, and yet the Iewes, the brethren of Christ, will not beleeve them.

Fourthly, the testimony of Pilate.

Fourthly, Pilate himselfe that condemned him to death, did testifie of his Resurrection unto life, in a letter that he wrote unto Tiberius Cæsar: and therefore Tiberius desired the Senate, to admit Christ into the number of their gods, for it was their custome (saith Tertullian) Veniſi homini Deus placeret, Deus non eſſet; That God should be no God, unlesse he were approved of men; and because they refused to receive him, (God not suffering the Arke and Dagon to stand together upon the same Altar, nor Christ and Beliall to bee worshipped together in the same Temple,) Tiberius was incensed against the Romanes, (God working all things together for the best for them that love him) that hee gave free leave and liberty unto all Christians, to beleeve and professe the Name of Iesus Christ.

Tertull. Apol. gentes c. 5.

Fiftly, the testimony of Iosephus Iosephus antiq. l. 8. c. 9.

Fiftly, Iosephus, the most learned among the latter Iewes saith, that cum Pilatus eum in crucem agendum decrevisset, &c. After Pilate had crucified him, he appeared unto his followers the third day, according as the Prophets had fore-shewed.

Sixtly, the sufferings of the Martyrs.

Sixthly, All Martyrs have most boldly confessed this truth, and have most constantly suffered in the defence of this truth: Tertullian doth most excellently shew the difference betwixt the Martyrs and Malefactors, saying; Mali apparere dovitant, deprehensi trepidant, accusati negant, condemnati marent; Evill doers are loth to be seene, being taken they tremble, being accused they deny it, being condemned they deplore themselves; but with the Martyrs there is no such matter; for they are neither ashamed of their profession, neither doe they grieve at their apprehension; but if they be noted for Christians, they rejoyce at it; if they be accused, they confesse it; if adjudged to die, they deeme it better then life: and therefore (saith he) Quid hoc mali est, cujus reus gaudet, cujus accusatio votum est, & cujus pœna fœlicitas? What evill is this, when the guilty of the fact rejoyceth in his accusation, and is made happy in his condemnation?

Zeph. 2. 11. Seventhly, the confession of Christ his enemies.

Seventhly, The very enemies of Christ, yea, and his greatest adversaries did confesse and justifie this truth of Christ; for as the Prophet said, that the Messias should famish all the gods of the earth; so Christ did spoyle them all, and stoppe the mourhes mouthes of all infernall spirits, that by their lying oracles, they could speake no more, but against their wills to confesse that hee was the Holy One of God, and that this Galilean had overcome them all, as Iulian that great Apostata, to his great cost at last, confessed, saith Nicephorus.

Eightly, The great plagues and punishments that were presently inflicted, and have still to this very day continued upon all the persecutors and denyers of Christ, doe sufficiently prove the Resurrection of Christ, and that Christ to bee the true Messias; for Pilate, being accused by the Iewes, was inforced to appeale from Vitellius the chiefe Governour of Syria, and to goe to Rome, to defend himselfe before Cæsar, who before Pilate came there, was dead; and therefore hee had none other remedy, but to wander as a Pilgrime and a forlorne creature, till he ended his daies in extreame miseries: so Agrippa suffered intollerable calamities: so Herod the Tetrarch, was spoyled of his goods, deprived of his Kingdome, and banished from his Countrey: So Herod that killed Iames, was miserably eaten up of loathsome wormes, and to the Iewes was measured the same measure, as they had measured unto Christ before; for as they had sold him for thirty pence, so thirty of them were sold for one penny; and five hundred of them were nayled to Crosses in one day, in so much that nec locus sufficeret crucibus, nec cruces corporibus: there was not place sufficient for the Crosses, nor Crosses enough to nayle them on: It were too too lamentable to relate more of those dolefull Tragedies, which Iosephus, Eusebius, Evagrius, and others, have written of them, and what they suffered at the finall ruine and destruction of Ierusalem, and what heavie bondage (farre worse then that Egyptian slavery) they have endured to this very day: Hence it is that Rabbi Samuel, about sixe hundred yeares agone, writ a tractate in forme of an Epistle, unto Rabbi Isaac, Master of the Synagogue of the Iewes, in Subjulmita, a Citie of Morocco, wherein he doth excellently discusse the cause of their long captivity, their great blindnesse, and extreame misery: and after that he had proved, that this punishment was inflicted upon them, for some great and grievous sin, he sheweth that sinne to be the same whereof the Prophet Amos speaketh; For three transgressions of Israel, and for foure, non transferam eos: I will not turne away the punishment thereof, because they sold the righteous for silver: And though hee saith that their Rabbies doe understand this righteous to bee Ioseph that was sold by his brethren into Egypt; yet because the Prophet putteth this for the fourth sin, and the greatest sin of Israel; and because he cannot finde any three sins of the sonnes of Israel before the selling of Ioseph, therefore he maketh the selling of Ioseph to be the first sin of Israel, the worshipping of the Calfe in Horeb to be the second, the abusing and the killing of Gods Prophets to be the third, and the fourth to be the selling of Iesus Christ; For the first, they served foure hundred yeares; for the second, they wandred forty yeares in the Wildernesse, untill they that came out of Egypt were all consumed and brought to nothing, excepting onely Caleb and Ioshuah; for the third, they were held Captives seaventy yeares in Babylon; and for the fourth, the said Rabbi Samuel confesseth that they were held in most pittifull Captivity to this very day; because he was most unjustly sold, and most shamefully delivered to death, as he sheweth in the seaventh Chapter of the said Tractate.

Much and many more circumstantiall proofes and demonstrations of his Resurrection, to shew him to be the true Messias, might be produced; but I hope these will serve, I say not to make us to beleeve this truth, (for to that end, I hope wee neede not bring any proofe at all, because we doe fully and undoubtedly beleeve the same already) but to shew that our Fore-fathers have not, and we doe not beleeve these things without more then abundant and unanswerable proofes thereof; and to convince that malicious obstinacy and infidelity of all those, whether professed Iewes, or seeming Christians, which notwithstanding such an Army of arguments, and such a cloud of witnesses, will still continue blinded and hardned in unbeliefe. It were strange there should bee any Atheists amongst us; yet I thinke it was not without cause, that D. Fotherby writ his large and learned dis-

Eightly, the heavie punishments of Christs persecutors.

Ioseph. antiq. l. 18. c. 11.

Chap. 17.

Chap. 18.

In aureo tractatu Rabbi Sam. de miserrima statu Iudæorum.

Amos 2. 6.

What Rabbi Samuel saith concerning Iesus Christ.

Why the Author did so prosecute the proofes of Christs Resurrection.

course against Atheisme; and questionlesse they that deny God, will never beleeve in Christ; and therefore as that booke shall be a witnesse against all Atheists in the latter day, to condemne them; so shall this which I have written, be an accuser of all those that will not beleeve in Iesus Christ.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the place from whence our Saviour rose, both in respect of his body and soule.

Two things to be observed.

NOw having seene that the Messias, when he should come, was to rise againe the third day, and that our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ is that true Messias, because he did rise againe upon the third day, I must yet intreate you to consider (that so you may have the full knowledge of this point) these two especiall things.

1. The place from whence he rose,
2. The manner how he rose. } And

Arsatius in politil. la ser. de resurrect. fol. 122.

1 The place from whence Christ rose.

First, we must understand that as Christ in respect of his humane nature, consisted both of body and soule; so his Resurrection must needs be considered, both in respect of his body and soule.

First, The Resurrection of the Body, was that, whereby he raised the same from the grave, a dead carkasse to be a living and a most glorious body, never to die againe.

The place from whence Christ raised his soule.

Secondly, The Resurrection of his Soule must be from some infernall place, or else it must be a descention, and not a Resurrection of his soule: and therefore, as in our Creede we professe to beleeve that he descended into Hell; so we must likewise confesse that he raised himselfe from Hell: but here unawares, I am fallen into an Ocean of contention. For

First, Some say this Article of our Creede crept in by negligence, and therefore they would have raced it out againe: but that would prove a want of Gods providence, that would suffer his whole Church to erre so grossely in the chiefe summe of her Christian faith; and if such things might creepe in our Creede, which is but the abstract of our faith, then much more might easily creepe into our Scriptures, which are so large an expresser both of faith and manners; but the Spirit of Christ is alwaies with his Church, to guide it into all truth, and the Church of Christ is the Pillar of truth, and a most faithfull preserver of all truth: and therefore this opinion is most absurd.

Foure expositions of that article of Christs descention into Hell.

Secondly, Others still retaining the words, cannot agree upon the meaning of the sentence; and of these I finde foure severall expositions.

1 Exposition.

The first is, that the soule of Christ suffered the paines of Hell upon the Crosse.

That Christ suffered not the torments of the damned. Iohn 9.

But this cannot stand: first, because we must bring in such a sense as will agree with the words after his burial; for that being dead and buried, he descended into Hell: and secondly, because (as that worthy Bishop of Winchester hath most excellently shewed) there be eight speciall things in Hell paines, which the soule of Christ could not possibly suffer. As

First, An outward and inward darkenesse, for Christ was Light, and in him was no darkenesse at all, saith the Evangelist.

Secondly, Destruction of body and soule.

Mat. 10. Apoc. 20. Aug. de civit. l. 13. c. 2.

Thirdly, The Lake burning with fire and brimstone, which is the second death, Et qua sient nullorum est bonorum, ita nulli bona est; And which, as it is the place of none that is good, so it is good to none: and therefore either Christ was not good, or he tasted not of this second death: or if he did, then not upon the Crosse; because the first death must precede the second.

Fourthly, The Worme of conscience, continually afflicting them for their sins; sins; but in Christ there was no sin; and therefore in him, there could not be any touch of conscience accusing him for sin.

Fiftly, Rejection from the presence of God.

Sixtly, Malediction.

Seventhly, Vengeance of fire.

Eightly, Continuance for ever; All set downe in this one sentence, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire. And neither of these can be laid upon Christ without great blasphemie; and therefore he cannot be said to suffer the paines of Hell upon the Crosse, without great Heresie.

Mat. 25.

The second exposition is, that he descended into Hell, signifies Christ his buriall; because Sheol commonly signifieth the grave: but this cannot stand; first, because it were an absurd thing, in a briefe rehearsall of the summe of faith, to have one Article twice repeated, and to have the plainest one, he was buried, expounded by a darke and enigmaticall exposition, hee descended into Hell; secondly, because it is not said, that he was laid in Sheol, but he descended into Hell: which signifieth a voluntary motion, and therefore cannot signifie his buriall.

2 Exposition. That all in this article signifieth not the grave.

The third exposition is, that it signifieth the state of the dead: but this likewise cannot stand; first, because this exposition cannot avoide Lymbus Patrum: for if Hell signifie the state of the dead, the place of the dead can neither bee Heaven nor Paradise; secondly, because whersoever Hell is named, as an opposition to Heaven, it signifieth the place of the damned, even in the Old Testament, and in the New Testament; but descending, is a plaine opposition to ascending, as it is said, that Lazarus was carried up to Abrahams bosome: and therefore it Sheol should signifie the state of the dead, it should have beene said, that he ascended up into Sheol, which is most ridiculous.

3 Exposition. That this article signifieth not the place of the dead. Iob 11.

Psal. 139. & 8.

Matth. 16.

Luke 16.

The fourth exposition is, that he descended into the place of the damned; for the words of the Creede, He descended into Hell, must neither be allegorized nor confounded with the former words, but they must be understood as they are spoken: He descended into Hell: And that for three speciall reasons,

1. Necessity requireth it.
2. The Scripture prooveth it.
3. All antiquity confirmeth it.

4 Exposition. That the soule of Christ after the separation from the body, descended into the place of the damned.

First, Necessity required, that he should descend into Hell; for man being invironed with three dreadfull enemies, viz.

1. Sinne during life.
2. Death shortning life.
3. Hell tormenting after death.

3 Proofe.

Three dreadfull enemies of man.

And the Resurrection of Christ, being the full conquest of all our enemies, hee must overthrow Sin, Death, and Hell, or else we do but vainely boast of releasing us from sin, or despising death, if the right and power of Hell do still remaine over us: and therefore Christ must overcome Satan, and destroy his Pallace, before we can bee freed from his prison. And this Christ hath done three wayes,

1. By subduing
2. By tying
3. By spoyling

Satan.

Christ destroyed Hell three waies.

Mat. 12.

Luke 11.

The conquest that Christ was wont only by suffering, but also by trampling Satan under feet.

For so our Saviour testifieth, saying, when a strong man armed, keepeth his pallace, his things that he possesseth are in peace, but when a stronger then he commeth upon him, and taketh from him all his armour from him, he bindeth him: and then he spoyleth his house. And therefore Christ entred into Hell, the pallace of Satan, as a conqueror, he tyed him as the strong man, and he spoyled him as the right owner of that which he unjustly detained from him: and this is shewed by the Apostle, where he saith, that Christ spoyled powers and principalities, and made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in his owne person; for this triumphing cannot be upon the Crosse (though thereon it was obtained) because the conquest over Satan, was not to be by possessing, much lesse by suffe- ring the paines of Hell; but by treading his adversaries under his feete, that so hee might be truly called a conqueror: And therefore we must not thinke, that all his conquest was, at length to repell them, and with mighty feare, and strong cries to escape them, when the Apostle saith, He spoyled them & made an open shew of them; but it was a binding of them, and a trampling of them under feet; and the same was manifested to be thus fully accomplished at his Resurrection. And this necessity, not onely of suffering upon the Crosse, but also of conquering Satan in his own house, Irenæus sheweth, saying, Si homo non vicisset inimicum hominis, non justè victus esset inimicus; If man had not overcome the enemy of man, the enemy of man had not beene justly conquered.

Irenæus l. 3. c. 20.

2. Proofe. That the Scripture proveth the soule of Christ, to have descended into the place of the damned.

Secondly, the Scripture proveth the same thing; for the Prophet David, speaking in the person of Christ, saith, My flesh shall rest in hope, because thou wilt not forsake my soule in Hell, nor suffer thine holy one to see corruption, but here to take the soule for the body, or hell for the grave, (as some do,) I see no reason; Quia cum Scriptura dividit species, carnem & animam duo ostendit; For when the Scripture speaketh of soule and body, it must needs signifie both, saith Tertullian: and therefore David in his prediction, and S. Peter in his exposition, speaking both of the soule and body, five names, and two natures, and naming a distinct place for either of them, they must needes signifie two distinct and divers things, and most cleerely shew unto us, that when his body was laid in his grave, his soule descended into Hell.

Tertul. de carne Christi. c. 13.

3. Proofe. That all antiquity teacheth the same truth.

Thirdly, the whole classe of antiquity confirmes the same; for Thaddæus, one of the seaventy Disciples, taught the Citizens of Edessa, how Christ was crucified, and descended downe into Hell, and brake downe that wall which was never battered downe before: Ignatius confessed, how he suffered καὶ κατῆλθεν εἰς ἅδην μόνος, and descended alone into Hell, and brake downe that Rampier wall, which had stood firme from the beginning of the world: Athanasius in that Creede which we do professe, saith, that Christ suffered for our salvation, descended into Hell, and rose againe the third day from the dead: this is the Catholicke faith, which except a man beleeve faithfully he cannot be saved: S. Augustine saith, that Christ in soule was in Hell, the Scripture doth sufficiently declare; so prophesied by the Prophet, so understood by the Apostle, and so expounded unto us: and therefore, Quis nisi Infidelis negaverit fuisse apud inferos Christum? Who (saith he) but an Infidell will deny Christ to have beene in Hell? S. Hillary saith, that because the Law of humane necessity was such, that when our bodies were buried, our soules were to descend to Hell; Ideo istam descentionem Dominus ad consummationem veri hominis non recusavit; Christ himselfe did not refuse to descend into the same place; Pope Leo saith as much; and Fulgentius is as plaine as any of them all. I might reckon many more, but my purpose is not to say what I could in this point: onely I say that he descended into Hell, not to suffer, for that was finished on the Crosse, but for the subjection of Satan, and the deliverance of men; not of those that were in Hell, but of us, that we should not get to Hell; for how can we be delivered if Satan be not destroyed? how is he destroyed, if hell be not vanquished? for that is the Palace of his pleasures, and the horrour of our soules, the pit wherein there is no water; but for as much as this is the condemnation of man, and the Law of humane necessity, that the body should to the grave, and the soule to Hell for sin, it remained for the full effecting of our Redemption, that Christ should neither descend, whither man fell by delicts of sin, that is, into Hell, where the soule of the sinner was wont to be tormented, and to the grave, whither the flesh was wont to be corrupted, that by the death of the just he might all things, destroyed, life might be given to our flesh, and by the soule of the just descending into Hell, the torments of Hell might be abolished, saith Fulgentius.

Zach. 9. 11.

Fulgent. ad Trasi. l. 3 de resurrect. Dom.

Hilarius de Trinit. l. 9. & in Psal. 138.

Ignatius epist. ad Trall.

Athanas. de incar. & the like. Aug. epist.

Irenæus ad Trasi. l. 3 de resurrect. Dom.

Zach. 9. 11.

Fulgentius super Psal. Athanas. de incar.

And so I build upon this for mine exceeding comfort, that now I need not feare any enemy, because Christ suffered for my sins, destroyed all mine enemies, descended into Hell, vanquished the divels, and rose againe the third day, to make an open shew of this his most victorious conquest, and blessed be his name for the same.

CHAP.

Chap. IX.

Of the manner how Christ rose, and of the particular application thereof unto our selues.

Secondly, we are to consider the manner how our Saviour rose, and many other particulars concerning his resurrection, but chiefly we should obserue that his resurrection was

1. In respect of the place, from the dead;
2. In respect of the time, early;
3. In respect of his person, it was

1. true
2. perfect
3. glorious

a The manner how Christ rose.

I will not stand upon these particulars; but to apply all unto our selues, that we may reape some fruit by all, I must intreat you to remember what the Apostle saith, If thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and shalt beleeve in thine heart, that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saued; for as I told you before, that the resurrection of Christ is the onely, maine, unanswerable argument to prove Christ to be the true Messias, and the Saviour of the world; so heere you see the Apostle putteth the true beliefe in our Saviours resurrection, as the onely chiefe point that is necessary and sufficient for our salvation: and therefore it is not without cause, that the doctrine of the resurrection should be insisted upon, to be preached and manifested by us, and to be learned and beleeved by you.

The application of the resurrection unto our selues. Rom. 10. 9.)

But here we must know, that it is not the bare Theoricke, and intellectuall knowledge, that Christ is raised from the dead, at that time, from that place, and in that manner, as I have shewed unto you before, is sufficient for our salvation; for so the devils know it, and beleeve it too; and yet they receive no fruit nor benefit thereby; but it is the practicke, experimentall and applicative knowledge and beliefe in the resurrection of the Sonne of God, that is effectuall for the salvation of man. And therefore Saint Paul prayes, that Hee may know Christ, and finde in himselfe the vertue and power of the resurrection of Christ; for as the rising of the head doth ever cause the rising of all the parts of the body, which is united unto the head; so the resurrection of Christ doth ever worke a resurrection of all the members of Christ; for so the Apostle teacheth us; If the spirit of him that raised up Iesus dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken, and so raise up, your mortall bodies, by that spirit which dwelleth in you.

That it is not the Theoricke, but the applicative knowledge of Christs resurrection that will helpe us.

Philip. 3. 10, 11.

Rom. 8. 11.

And we find this resurrection of us that are his members to be two-fold,

1. From sinne, and from all the vanities of this world.
2. From death, and from the corruption of the grave.

That the resurrection of Christian is two-fold.

First, if we be the members of Christ, then certainely we are risen with Christ, risen I say, from the death of sinne, unto the life of righteousnesse; and if we be risen with Christ, then doth our hearts wish and desire those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, saith the Apostle; and therefore whosoever walloweth in sinne, and delighteth in the things of this world, it is certaine that he hath not as yet any part or portion in the resurrection of Iesus Christ; for if we be the members of Christ, we must also rise with Christ, and we must rise as Christ hath risen; for otherwise we would all rise, and many doe rise, but not as Christ rose, and therefore such risers

1 From sinne

Coloss 3.

That the resurrection of Christ is a patterne to teach us how we should rise from sinne and from the company of sinners.

——— tolluntur in altum
ut lapsu graviore ruant. ———

the higher they rise the greater shall be their fall, saith the Poet.

But we must rise as Christ hath risen, and that is, as I told you before,

First, in respect of the place, from the dead; so must we rise from the dead

1 In respect of the place from the dead.

workes of ſinne, and from all thoſe that are dead in ſinne: Chriſt left the dead in their graves, and walked among the living, and I would to God we could leave the company and ſociety of thoſe that doe ſtill lye wallowing and ſtinking in the graves of ſinne, and joyne our ſelues unto thoſe that live the life of grace; for, as he was a mad man poſſeſſed of a devill, that had his abiding among the tombes; ſo are all they no better then mad men, and poſſeſt of devils, that have their converſation with thoſe that are dead in ſinnes: and therefore I adviſe all that would live with Chriſt, to follow the counſell of the Apoſtle, not to bee companions of them that are dead in ſinne, but as Chriſt roſe and left the dead, ſo doe you riſe and leave theſe dead and deadly ſinners.

2 In reſpect of the time quickly. Eccleſ. 12. 1.

Secondly, in reſpect of the time, Chriſt roſe ſpeedily without delay, he roſe earely before the morning watch; ſo ſhould we riſe from ſinne, and as Salomon ſaith, Remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth, before the evill dayes come, when we ſhall ſay we have no pleaſure in them. And yet it is a fearefull thing to conſider how many men do put off and delay their repentance, and amendment of life unto their lateſt daies: for we ſerve the world, and follow after the luſts of our owne fleſh while we are young, and we put all the burthen of ſerving God, upon our weake and feeble and decrepit age: we ſacrifice the flowers of our yeeres to ſinne and Satan, the fineſt, the faireſt, and the fatteſt beaſts; but to God we thinke it is enough to give the blinde, the halt, and the lame, the withered, and wrinckled, and barreneſt times of our life: but God will have none ſuch; for he refuſeth ſuch ſacrifices in his Law: and therefore ſurely he will not eaſily receive ſuch in the time of the Goſpell; for as there were three paiments of firſt fruits among the Iewes; the firſt was primitiæ ſpicarum, the firſt fruits of their eares of corne, and this was paid earely about Eaſter; the ſecond was primitiæ panum, the firſt fruits of their loaves, when their corne was converted into bread, and this was ſomewhat earely too, about Whitſuntide; and the third was primitiæ frugum, the firſt fruits of all their latter fruits in generall, and this was very late, about the fall of the leafe in September; and in the two firſt paiments, which were offered earely, God accepted a part for himſelfe; but in the third paiment, which came late, God would have no part at all; even ſo, if we offer the firſt fruits of our young yeeres earlely unto God, he will accept it for himſelfe; but if we give our beſt yeeres unto Satan, and offer the laſt yeeres unto God, I ſay no more, but he will not eaſily receive them: and no marvell, quia labore fracta inſtrumenta, &c. for to what end, and with what face can any man bring thoſe inſtruments to worke in Gods vineyard, which are blunted and broken in the ſervice of the World? or with what honeſty can we offer that unto God, which we would be aſhamed to offer unto a man? for who would offer a lame horſe, a diſordered clocke, or a torne booke unto his King? and yet our fleſh is our beaſt, the courſe of our life is our clocke, and the hiſtory of our actions is our booke; and ſhall we offer our fleſh unto God, when it is lame and tyred with exceſſe of wantonneſſe? ſhall we commend our lives unto him, when as the whole courſe of the ſame is out of order? or ſhall we preſent the ſtory of our actions unto him, when as a thouſand ſinnes of our owne (for which we ſhould be ſorrowfull) and a thouſand bleſſings of God (for which we ſhould be thankefull) are quite defaced, and torne out of our memory? or if we ſhould offer ſuch unto God, why ſhould we thinke it ſtrange, that he ſhould reject them? quia temperantia in ſenectute non eſt temperantia, ſed impotentia intemperantiæ: for continency, abſtinency, temperancy, and ſuch like, in old age, are no vertues, but a diſability to be vitious; ſo to leave good fellowſhip when thou art ſicke, and many other ſinnes when thou art old, is not a leaving and forſaking of thy ſinnes, but thy ſinnes have left thee, like paraſites in adverſity; Nullus ad amiſſas ibit amicus opes; for if thou couldeſt have cheriſhed them any longer, longer they would have continued with thee.

That God will hardly accept late ſervices tendered unto him.

Three paiments of firſt fruits among the Iewes.

Becauſe late ſervice is ſeldome true ſervice.

And therefore, ſeeing it is good for a man to beare his yoke in his youth (as Ieremy ſaith) becauſe age is unfit for burthens; let us not be like the perſecutors of the

the Iewes, which laid the heavieſt yokes upon the ancienteſt men; let us not reſerve the weight and burthen of our repentance, untill our latter age; but if we would have God not to remember the ſinnes of our youth, let us remember God in the dayes of our youth, and eſpecially ſeeing we know not whether God will heare us in our age or not, becauſe we would not amend our lives in our youth, and becauſe indeed whatſoever is done then, is commonly done amiſſe, let us herein imitate our Saviour Chriſt, to riſe early from the bed of ſinne, and to ſay with that Princely Prophet, O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeeke thee. Pſal. 63. 1.

And there be two maine reaſons, that ſhould move us to riſe haſtily and ſpeedily from ſinne; Two ſpeciall reaſons to moove us ſpeedily to forſake all ſinne.

that is, { 1. The nature of ſinne. 2. The uncertainty of our life. } For

First, Sinne in the Soule, is like a ſtaine in a garment; the longer it remaines in it, the harder it is taken out of it. 1 Reaſon.

Vidi ego quod fuerat primum medicabile vulnus,
Deſertum longæ damna tuliſſe moræ:

For as in the diſeaſes of the body, the longer they be uncured, the more the body is indangered; or as we ſee it in a fire, Flamma recens parvâ ſparſa recedit aquâ, A little water quenches a ſparke, but much water will hardly quench great flames; Even ſo it is in the maladies of the Soule, the longer we continue in ſinne, the harder we can leave ſinne; And therefore, let us make no tarrying to turne to the Lord our God, but as Herod dealt with the Infants, ſo let us deale with ſinne, kill it while it is young. Eccleſ. 5. 7. Math. 2. 16.

It is recorded of Roſſenſis, that when Henry the eight ſent to him for his conſent and approbation to ſuppreſſe ſome ſuperfluous Abbies, he told him, that on a time the Axe ſent unto the Trees of the Forreſt, onely for ſo much wood as would make it but a handle, and in requitall, it would pare and prune off all rotten and fruitleſſe branches that did nothing elſe but cumber the Trees, and hinder the livelier branches to beare forth better fruit; the requeſt ſeeming reaſonable, was unqueſtionably imbraced, and moſt willingly granted unto the Axe: but the ſucceſſe anſwered not the expectation of the Trees; for inſtead of pruning the corrupted branches, it ſoone waſted ſtocke and roote, untill it made way for the Plow, uncontrolably to paſſe through the middeſt of the Forreſt: And ſo I feare (ſaith Roſſenſis) your Majeſty will proceede with the poſſeſſions of the Church: So he did; and ſo doth ſinne deale with every Man; it demands but little, but it ſtill incroacheth, untill it deſtroyeth our ſoules. And therefore we ſhould withſtand ſinne at the firſt, and never ſuffer it ſo much as to enter into our ſoules; And we ſhould follow the counſell of the Bridegroome, Ariſe my Love, my Dove, my faire one; Make haſte, as the Angell ſaid unto Lot, to ſave thy ſelfe, and come away. O come, come with me from Lebanon, my Spouſe, with me from Lebanon, looke from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir, and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes, and from the Mountaines of the Leopards. Roſſenſis his parable to Henry the eighth. Cant. 2. 10. Gen. 19. 22. Cant. 4. 8.

Secondly, We ought to make haſte to riſe from ſin, and to begin betimes to ſerve the Lord, by reaſon of the ſhortneſſe and uncertainty of our life; for as Hugo Cardinalis ſaith, The way that we are to paſſe is long, the place that we are to goe unto farre, and our time ſhort; and we know not how ſoone God will call for us: And therefore, we ought to worke the worke of God while it is day; For the night commeth, when no man can worke. 2 Reaſon. Iohn 9. 4.

And here we muſt further obſerve, that as he roſe early, ſo he roſe firſt of all; for He is the firſt fruits of them that ſleepe; To teach us, that we ſhould alſo ſtrive to be the firſt in all goodneſſe: but we are loath to doe this; we will doe as others doe, we cannot abide to be ſingular: ſuch is our Nature; we ſtrive with the Phariſees to be firſt in honors, That we ſhould ſtrive to be firſt in Gods ſervice.

Lucan. in Pharsal. lib. 1.

Nec quenquam jam ferre potest Cæsar ve priorem
Pompejusve parem. ——

We would faine be the first in reputation, but we never strive to be the first in performing the duties of Religion: It was otherwise with Ioshua, who called all Israel together, and perswaded them all to serue their God, or if they would not, he told them plainely, That he and his House would serve the Lord: And I would it were so with us, for it is our greatest honour to be the first in Gods service.

Iosh. 24. 15.

3 In respect of the person, he rose.

Thirdly, In respect of his owne person, Christ rose,

1 Truely.

Matth. 23. 13.

First, Truly, without hypocrisie, not fainedly, but certainely: So should we; for woe be unto you hypocrites, and woe to him that goeth two manner of wayes; that holds up his hands, and lifts up his eyes to Heaven, and yet hath his heart full of all unrighteousnesse; for though with men things are judged as they seeme, yet God seeth our hearts, and we deceive our selues, if we thinke to deceive him. It is observed in Nature, that the Foxe nips the necke, the Mastive the throate, the Ferret the liver, but God careth onely for the heart; for he saith, Sonne give me thy heart; and he is said to be a searcher and a tryer of the hearts: And therefore, we must not make Saint Pauls shew of godlinesse, to be Saint Peters cloake of wickednesse, to rise from sinne in shew, and not in truth; for these rise like Samuel, fainedly, not truly, by a Witch, not by God: It is that Witch hypocrisie, worse then the Witches of Thessalie, that raiseth them up a little to deceive the World, and to make us beleeve they are true Samuels, whereas indeed they be very Divels. Our Saviour bids us to beware of such, that have Iacobs voice and Esaues hands, the words of Saints, and the workes of Iewes; And I bid them beware of Satan, for being raised up by him, and not by the power of Christ, he will at last unmaske their hypocriticall faces, and then he will cast them down, and destroy them; for though it is reported, that in a certaine battell some lost their livings for running away, which notwithstanding were bestowed upon others, that fled tenne leagues further; yet it is not so with God; for He will render unto every man according to his worke.

Eccles. 2. 12. That we should raise our selues truely, and not hypocritically from sinne.

2 Tim. 3. 5.

1 Pet. 2. 16.

2 Totally. That we should raise our selues from all sinnes.

2 Cor. 5. 10.

Secondly, Christ rose totally without partition; for he left no part behind him: So should we rise from all sins, or else all is but in vaine; for we reade that Herod at the preaching of Iohn Baptist, did raise himselfe from many sins, but from his dearely beloved Herodias, he would not rise; so many men can be perswaded by the Preachers to forsake many sins, but from their bosome, darling, usuall, customary sinnes, they will not rise. And surely every man is naturally inclined to some sinnes more then to others; as some men to good-fellowship and drunkennesse, some to wantonnesse, and these could willingly be contented to refraine (as they doe sometimes) from all, or most other sinnes; but from these, their naturally beloved or usually practised sinnes, they cannot, they will not abstaine: It is their infirmity, and they cannot leave them: and therefore as Naaman the Syrian said unto Elizeus, onely in this thing the Lord pardon thy servant; so say these men, but in a worse manner, onely in this sinne the Lord be mercifull unto me, and I will strive to raise my selfe from all other sinnes whatsoever.

2 Reg. 5. 18.

Aulus Gellius. attic. noct. l. 12. c. 1.

It is reported by Gellius that Phavorinus, seeing a mother sharing her duties betwixt her selfe and her nurse, said; Quodnam est hoc contra naturam imperfectum, & dimidiatum matrum genus? What a strange halfe-kind of mother against nature is this, to bring forth, and presently to cast forth from her the fruit of her owne wombe? such halfe-kinde of Christians have we now a dayes, that will scarce performe halfe their duties: it were well, if they were like Naaman, or like Agrippa, almost Christians; if they were so, and could goe in sincere practice, as the young man in the Gospell went in proud profession, all these things have I done from my youth up; yet because with that young man they want one thing, all the other things will availe them nothing; for to be behind in no gift, as S. Paul speaketh, is the generall description of every truly renued Christian: and we know that as on what part soever of a man a Lyon catcheth hold, he will

Acts 26. 28.

Matth. 19. 20.

hold

hold it fast, and draw us by that part unto himselfe, or we must suffer that part to be torne off from our selves, and what gate soever the enemy findeth open, he can through that one gate leade in all his Army into our Citty; even so Satan cares not where he may have hold of thee, so he may have hold of thee, and he cares not by what doore he may enter into thy soule, so he may enter in by any doore; for as one leake may sinke a ship, one wound may kill a man; so one sinne especially practised may slay the soule: and what availeth it whether covetousnesse or prodigality, precisenesse or prophanesse doe raigne in us? whether on the right hand, or on the left hand, by over-going or undergoing, we be deprived of salvation? for though the by-paths of iniquity, which doe misleade a Christian, be very many, yet they all meete in one place; for the issues of them all are the issues of death, saith Salomon. Pro. 26.25.

And therefore if this roaring Lyon hath catcht hold of thine eye, that by wanton lookes, lookes full of adulteries (as Saint Peter speaketh) it maketh thee to offend, pull it out and cast it off, that thou mayest free the rest of thy selfe from eternall destruction; and so of all other parts, doe as our Saviour bids thee, free thy selfe from Satan; Et redime te captum quam queas minimo, and free thy selfe as soone as thou canst, and as well as thou canst; for thou wert better shake off that one sin, then that Satan by that one sinne should take thee into Hell fire: and as they use to doe in besieged Cities, where the assault is fiercest, there they place the stoutest men; so doe thou against sin and Satan, strive most to binder him, where he striveth most to enter; for so David saith, that he refrained from his owne wickednesse, that is, even from that sin, that he was most of all inclined unto; and so let us wholly and perfectly rise from all sins. 2 Pet. 2.14.

Thirdly, Christ rose constantly without apostacy, that is, he rose gloriously, never to die againe; for Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more, death hath no more power over him: and so his epithite is, he that was dead, and is alive, and liveth for evermore: So should we rise from sin, never to sin againe, not like Lazarus that rose from his grave and dyed againe, rise now from sin and immediately fall into the same or the like sinnes againe; but as we must obey Christ his voice, saying, Come unto me, so we must obey his voice, saying, abide in me; and as William the Conquerer is said to have sunke all his ships when he arrived here in England, because he would take away all hope of flying backe; so must we sinke all sinnes, that wee may never swimme or ride on sinne againe, drowne them in the seas, dash them against the walls, and so shake hands with all sins, that wee never returne to any sin againe; for, though it was an errour in Novatus to denie remission unto sins of recidivation, that is, when a man relapseth and falleth againe into the same sin, because the Apostle saith, It is impossible that they which were once inlightened, (and so raised from sin,) if they fall away, should be renued by repentance; and S. Peter saith, It had beene better for them never to have knowne the wayes of righteousnesse then after they have knowne it, to turne away from the holy Commandements; and because we never read that either Christ raised the same men twice, no not the widowes sonne, whom he pitied, nor yet Lazarus whom he loved, nor that the Saints ever fell into the same sinnes againe, after they had them once remitted, as David never committed adultery againe, Peter never denied his Master againe, Paul never persecuted the Church againe, after they had these sinnes once remitted; though I say this was an error in the Novatians, because the Apostles speake of falling away from Christ, by a finall apostacie, and not of falling againe into sinne through our carnall infirmity; 2 because the comparison of Christ raising the dead, with the raising of us from sin, doth not (as no other comparison doth) in all things holy equipage; 3 because the other men not falling into the same sinnes againe, doth but shew that they had a great measure of grace to preserve them from falling, and not prove a denial of renuing grace unto us, if we should fall againe; and they are set downe for our imitation, that we should strive to stand, and never to fall, and not for our desperation, if we doe fall into the same sins againe; yet I say, that this relapsing into sinne, marring with

Why Novatus thought sins of recidivation, should not be pardoned. Heb. 6.

2 Pet. 2.21.

3 To die no more. That we should so rise from sin, as never to fall to sin againe. Revel. 1.18.

Mat. 11.28. Iohn 15.4.

That relapsing into sin is very dangerous.

πληγὰν χολαίνει ῥάνις ὕδατος, ἱρπύλαχέπη. Apud Galen. l. 3. de temperamen. Assidue illisu dura cavat undula saxum.

Contritur annulus usu.

What a fearefull sin Apostacie is.

2 Pet. 2. 21.

Rom. 9. 21

Two speciall points to be considered.

1 Point to preserve us in the truth by a double consideration.

1 Who we are that teach the people.

with the dog unto his vomit, and with the swine to her wallowing in the mire, is exceeding fearefull and dangerous: for as vulgus iteratum, &c. nature is tired with the continuall assault of the same diseases, and at last is forced to yeeld unto them, if it cannot by some meanes expell them, and as the same sore often wounded is very hardly cured; so the same sinnes still assaulting our soules, will without doubt (if they be not extinguished by grace) make our last end worse then our beginning.

And therefore, it were well for us, if (when we have risen from sinne) wee would ever pray to God for grace, that we might never fall into sin againe; for otherwise, as the old Proverbe is,

Gutta cavat lapidem, non vi, sed sæpe cadendo,
Sic homo fit Damon, non vi sed sæpe cadendo;
scilicet in peccatum: often sinning, makes the greatest sinners.

But if the relapsing into any particular sinne be so dangerous, O then what a fearefull thing is the falling backe from our most holy profession? surely, it is the most remarkable thing in the description of the sinne against the Holy Ghost, and the most apparant signe of eternall destruction: behold the punishments of Apostates that are left for our examples: Lots wife was turned into a pillar of salt, and the children of Israel, that in their hearts were turned backe againe into Ægypt, had their carkasses left in the wilderneſse; and no marvell; for this is a transcendent sinne; and I know no sinne so great as this; Herods bloudy murders, even of infants, and Nero's savage cruelty, even against the Saints, and the most barbarous acts of the most inhumane heathen Tyrants, did never sound so odious in mine eares, as that horrid name of Iulian the Apostate; for that must stand as a rule infallible, that they are farre better which never knew the way of righteousnesse, then they which once knew it, and then turned aside from the holy Commandement.

Beloved, it hath pleased God to bring us out of Ægypt, and to us that walked in darkenesse, and in the shadow of death, hath the glorious light of the Gospell shined, and the truth of Christ is amongst us; O let us not love darkenesse more then light, let us not returne from light to darkenesse.

I know there is a continuall opposition, and a mighty warre betwixt truth and falshood, farre greater then that betwixt the house of Saul and the house of David, and each one of them seeketh to prevaile against the other; and I hope I neede not use any argument to proove that we are in the truth: It was the Corinthians fault, after they were baptized, beleeved in Christ, and professed Christ a long while, all on a sudden (like the men that sailed into the midst of the Ocean, and awaking out of a dreame, made a great question whether they were in any ship or no) they began to doubt whether there was any Resurrection or not; and I hope we will not be like any of these herein, after we have it so dearely purchased with the blood of Martyrs, so truely preached by the painefull servants of Christ, and so long preserved amongst us by the free grace of Christ, now to question, whether we be in the truth or not; for that is beyond all question; God hath brought it to us, wee have preached it to you, and you have beleeved it, and profest it gloriously and Christianly before the face of the whole world: and therefore I will onely shew you two speciall points to bee our helps and furtherance in our warfare against errour.

The first shall be to preserve us in the truth.

The Second shall be to suppresse falshood, that it prevaile not against the truth.

For the first, I desire all men to consider these two things.

Videlicet, { 1. Who we be that teach you. 2. What they are that seeke to seduce you. } And

First, we are plaine men, that compasse not sea and land to inlarge our Monarchie; wee labour not so much to get your wealth, as to save your soules; for as the Apostle saith, We seeke not yours, but you; and I hope most of us (if occasion served, ved, you ſhould ſee it) would ſeale our words with our blood: for as there were 7000. men in Iſrael, that bowed not their knees to Baal; ſo I aſſure my ſelfe there are many thouſands in England, that would lay downe their neckes, and loſe their lives, rather then they would depart a nayles bredth from the truth of that doctrine which we have taught: And I boldly ſay it, if Satan ſhould be let looſe, to perſecute the Saints of God, I doe unfainedly wiſh, my deereſt bones might firſt burne to give light unto all them that deſire to walke in this truth.

Secondly, conſider what they be that ſeeke to ſeduce you; and I doubt not but you ſhall finde moſt of them, to be either ſuch as were muzled in errors a cunabulis, even from their cradles, by their ſeduced friends, popiſh children of popiſh parents, ſent and bred in the myſteries of iniquity; and ſhould we looke for theſe to be otherwiſe then they be? or elſe to be ſuch as through diſcontent to ſee ſome hoyſted up unto Moſes chayre, which are ſcarce worthy to fit at Gamaliels feet, and themſelves that have good parts in them, through want of friends, or meanes, to be quite neglected, have gone from us, either becauſe they hoped for better fortunes in other ſoyles, or becauſe they were lothe to indure their meane fortunes to be perceiv'd among their owne friends; becauſe noble ſpirits had rather begge where they are not knowne, then any waies be baſe where their worth is ſeene: I confeſſe a fault in neglecting them; and it is too common amongſt us; but will you be contented to hazard your ſoules upon their perſwaſions that hazarded their owne through diſcontent? I hope better things of you, and I aſſure my ſelfe, that as you are in the truth, ſo you will continue in the truth unto your death.

2 Who they bee that ſeeke to ſeduce our people.

Acts 22. 3.

For the ſecond, how we ſhall ſuppreſſe falſhood, that it prevaile not againſt truth. I referre you to my firſt Treatiſe of the miſery of Man, where I have ſet downe my beſt advice in this caſe. But here it may be, ſome will ſay, Quorſum hæc? to what end is all this ſpoken, to inſinuate feare into the hearts of men, where there is no feare? I anſwer, that his Gratious Majeſty, not onely by his Royall authority in maintaining true Religion, but alſo by his Divine pen, by his owne paines, defending the truth of our Religion, and his wiſe Councellors, whoſe Counſells are like the great deep, too great for me to dive into them, and too high for you to attaine unto them, do not only free us from all feare of idolatry and ſuperſtition, but doe alſo aſſure us of a moſt happy continuance of our moſt true Religion, in a farre more glorious manner then our meane capacities can perceive: and yet there is one great, powerfull, and politicke one, under whoſe wings many are ſheltered, and he intrudeth himſelfe into all places, Countrey and City, Court and Councell-chamber, and laboureth by all meanes to put out our light, and to darken the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, and to bring in idolatry and ſuperſtition into our land againe; and that is the prince of darkeneſſe, the divell and Satanas, that entred into Paradiſe, to deceive our Fore-fathers, that ventured upon the Sonne of God, and ſaid, mitte te deorſum, if thou be the Sonne of God, caſt thy ſelfe downeward, and will ſuggeſt it into every man, if thou would'ſt be the childe of God, mitte te retrorſum, then muſt thou returne backward, and be as thy Fore-fathers were: There is no doubt of this; if he could ſend none from Rome hither to corrupt us; yet while he hath roome for any in hell, he will never leave to labour by his wicked ſuggeſtions, to corrupt us himſelfe; he will enter into our chambers, he will creepe into our boſomes, and he will ſeeke by all meanes for to deceive us; we are not ignorant of his devices: And therefore I ſay, let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he falleth, and let us pray to God for grace, that as he hath raiſed us from ſin, and ſuperſtition; ſo he would preſerve us from relapſing or falling back into any of theſe ſins againe. And thus you ſee how Chriſt raiſed himſelfe from death, and how we ſhould raiſe our ſelves from ſin.

2 Point to ſuppreſſe falſhood. Vide, The Miſery of man.

That Satan alwaies laboureth to bring men into idolatry and ſuperſtition.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

And here we muſt further note, that as the conſideration of Chriſts Reſurrection ſhould make us conformable unto him, by our reſurrection from all ſin; ſo it ſhould be moſt comfortable unto us, both in reſpect of Chriſt, and our ſelves; quia reſurgens Chriſtus tantum attulit letitiæ, quantum moriens attulit doloris, becauſe Chriſt at his Reſurrection brought us more joy and comfort, then he did ſorrow and griefe

That the Reſurrectiō of Chriſt is a cauſe of great joy unto us.

Bernard de passione Domini. c. 46. p. 1336. k.

griefe at his passion, saith Saint Bernard; and therefore we should all of us, plus gaudere propter resurrectionem gloriosam, quam dolere propter passionem ignominiosam, now say with the Psalmist, sing we merrily unto the Lord our God, that hath turned our sorrow into joy, that we might sing one of the songs of Sion: and woe to that man that doth it not, quia indignum valde est si in eo die laudes debitas tacuerit lingua carnis, qua videlicet caro resurrexit autoris, because it is a great indignity that our tongues should be silent, from giving praise to God on that day, whereon our Saviour rose from his death, saith Saint Gregory. And as we should rejoyce at the consideration of the Resurrection of Christ from the dead; so we should likewise rejoyce for the resurrection of our owne soules from sinne; for as Tobias said, what joy can I have, so long as I sit here in darkenesse? so may we say of every sinner, what comfort can he have whiles he lives in sin? or what fruit can he have of those things, whereof he must be ashamed, as the Apostle saith? And so much for our resurrection from sin.

Gregor. hom. 21. in Evangel.

Rom. 6.

That the Resurrection of Christ is an assurance of our resurrection to eternall life.

Secondly, if we be the members of Christ, we shall assuredly rise from our graves, and from death, unto the resurrection of everlasting life; quia ut Redemptor noster suscepit mortem, ne mori timeremus, ita ostendit resurrectionem, ut nos resurgere posse consideremus, for as our Redeemer died, that we might not be affraid of death, so he rose againe, that we might be sure of our resurrection unto life; for if the head be risen, then surely the members, in their due time, must rise and follow after; but Christ our head is risen from the dead (as I have abundantly shewed unto you before,) and therefore it must be that we which are his members, shall also rise and follow after. And lest any man should say, sperare de se non debet homo, quod in carne sua exhibuit Deus homo, that man should not hope for that to himselfe, which that God and man performed in himselfe, S. Gregory answereth, that solus in illo tempore mortuus est, & tamen solus minime resurrexit, although he died and was laid in his grave all alone, yet he did not rise againe alone, but he was accompanied with many others; to shew unto us, that as he died not for himselfe, so he rose not for himselfe, but for us that are his members.

And therefore, though heere we suffer all the miseries of this world, though our bodies be but semen terra, & esca vermium, the dust of the earth, and the foode of wormes, and though these bodies of ours should bee cast into the seas, and bee eaten of fishes, and those fishes should be caught, and should be eaten of men, and those men should be burnt to ashes, and those ashes cast into the seas, yet we may assure our selves, to our continuall comfort, and to our refreshment in all miseries, that God will collect us and raise vs up at the last day, and give unto every soule his owne body, and then make us like unto the glorious body of Iesus Christ. And so much for the first lesson, the lesson of Theorie, which these women, (and so likewise all men and women) must learne, and know, That Christ is risen from the dead, and therefore that we should rise from sin, and shall rise from our graves to eternall life.

1 Cor. 15.

CHAP. X.

What the women are commanded to doe, and why; and what speciall lessons we may learne for our instruction.

2 The lesson of practise.

How the Angell teacheth the women what they should doe.

FOr the second, that is, the lesson of practise, this Angell sheweth unto these women what they should doe, saying, ite, go your waies; why stand you here? and go quickly, without delay, for it is the Lords businesse, and cursed be they that do the worke of the Lord negligently; & dicite Discipulis, and tell his Disciples that Christ is risen from the dead; Tell his Disciples, first, quia vos ad praedicandum inferior sexus, ad exigendum infirmior; because your sex is lesse able to preach, lesse constant to persevere, saith S. Ambrose; secondly, because women must not teach; for to teach is a note of superiority, and women are bound to obey, and to learne at home of their husbands: and therefore I permit not a woman to teach saith the Apostle;

Why the women were to tell the Disciples that Christ was risen. Ambros. in loc.

thirdly,

thirdly, that as man did easily believe the woman, for his destruction, so he might now happily believe these women for his salvation; ecce and behold, he goeth before you into Galilee. Galilee of the Gentiles; because now the partition-wall that was betwixt the Iewes and the Gentiles is broken downe, and the calling of the Gentiles approacheth neere; & quia transmigrauerat a morte ad vitam, and because now he had passed from death to life, and was to passe from this vaine and momentary life unto that joyfull and eternall happinesse, he saith, behold he goeth before you into Galilee; because Galilee signifieth transmigration, or a passage over from one place unto another. And so you see the summe of the Angels injunction unto the women, what they must doe; and from hence we may learne these speciall lessons for our instruction.

What we should learne from the Angels instruction to the women.

First, that we must joyne practise unto our profession, if we would be happie; for these two must never be separated, but these things if you know, blessed are you if you do them, saith our Saviour; & yet it hath ever been the practise of Satan, to sever those whom God hath joyned together; and therfore in former times, he put out the light of the Word preached, that men might not know what to doe; and now when he seeth he can hide the light no longer, he gives you leave to know as much as you will, as much as Berengarius, who is said to know as much as was knowable; but he laboureth that you shall doe nothing at all, but shew your selves just like the Grecians, which knew what was honest, but didi not, or like the Scribes and Pharisees, which said and did not, saith our Saviour. But we should consider, first, that this is one of the chiefest ends why God gave his Lawes and his Commandements unto us, that we should doe them; for had he given them onely to be preserved, he might have lockt them up in iron coffers; or had he given them to be but talked of, he might have given them unto Iayes and Parrats.

First, practise.

Plinar. in Laton.

1 God gave his Lawes not to be talked of, but to be kept.

Secondly, we should know, that the practise of Christianity is the onely argument to proove us true Christians; for by this, Christ proved himselfe to be the Messias; and it is most true which Iovinian said of the Arrians and Orthodoxall Bishops, I cannot judge of your knowledge and disputations, but I can easily discerne your lives and conversations.

Practise onely proveth us Christians.

2 A good life converteth others.

Thirdly, we should remember that our actions are the best arguments, and the most unanswerable Syllogismes to convert infidels; for Sozomenus tells us, that the godly life of a poore captive woman moved a King and many others to become Christians, and Iulian writing to Arsacius, saith, that Christiana religio propter Christianorum erga omnes cujusvis Religionis beneficentiam propagata est; the piety and the charity of Christians did wonderfully cause the Christian Religion to increase; and Maximinus said, he could not choose but wonder to see how sedulous the Christians were in doing good.

Sozom. l. 2.

Basil. de 40. Mart.

Euseb. l. 9. c. 8.

Whereas on the other side, the lewd life of those that professe Christ doth bring forth many sower and bitter fruits; As

The bitter fruites of a bad life.

First, It dishonoureth God more then any other thing; his name is blasphemed through them among the Gentiles, which believe not God; and therefore God saith, why takest thou my Lawes in thy mouth, whereas thou hatest to be reformed?

First, it dishonoureth God.

Secondly, It proveth them to be no Christians, because the profession of Christianity is a profession of works, and not of words.

Secondly, it proveth such livers no Christians.

Thirdly, It hindereth the unsetled minde, to imbrace Christianity; for when they see men, like Tusser that wrote well of husbandry, but was himselfe the worst husband that lived, or like Erasmus Ruffian, that carried by the one side a good bottle of sack, and by the other side a faire guilded Testament, such as will heare much and talke more of Religion, and doe none of the works of God, how shall not this dissuade the unstable hearts from ever imbracing of Christianity? It is reported that Lynacrus reading the Sermon of Christ in the Mount, and considering the conversation of men in the world, said either this is not Gods Gospell, or we are not Gods people; and I pray God, that the faire-seeming shewes of hypocriticall professors, and their most vile and abhominable actions, be not the cause to kindle Gods fearefull indignation against us all.

Thirdly, it hindereth others to become Christians.